RosDok Rostocker Dokumentenserver
Dieses Werk wurde Ihnen durch die Universitätsbibliothek Rostock zum Download bereitgestellt.
Für Fragen und Hinweise wenden Sie sich bitte an: digibib.ub@uni-rostock.de

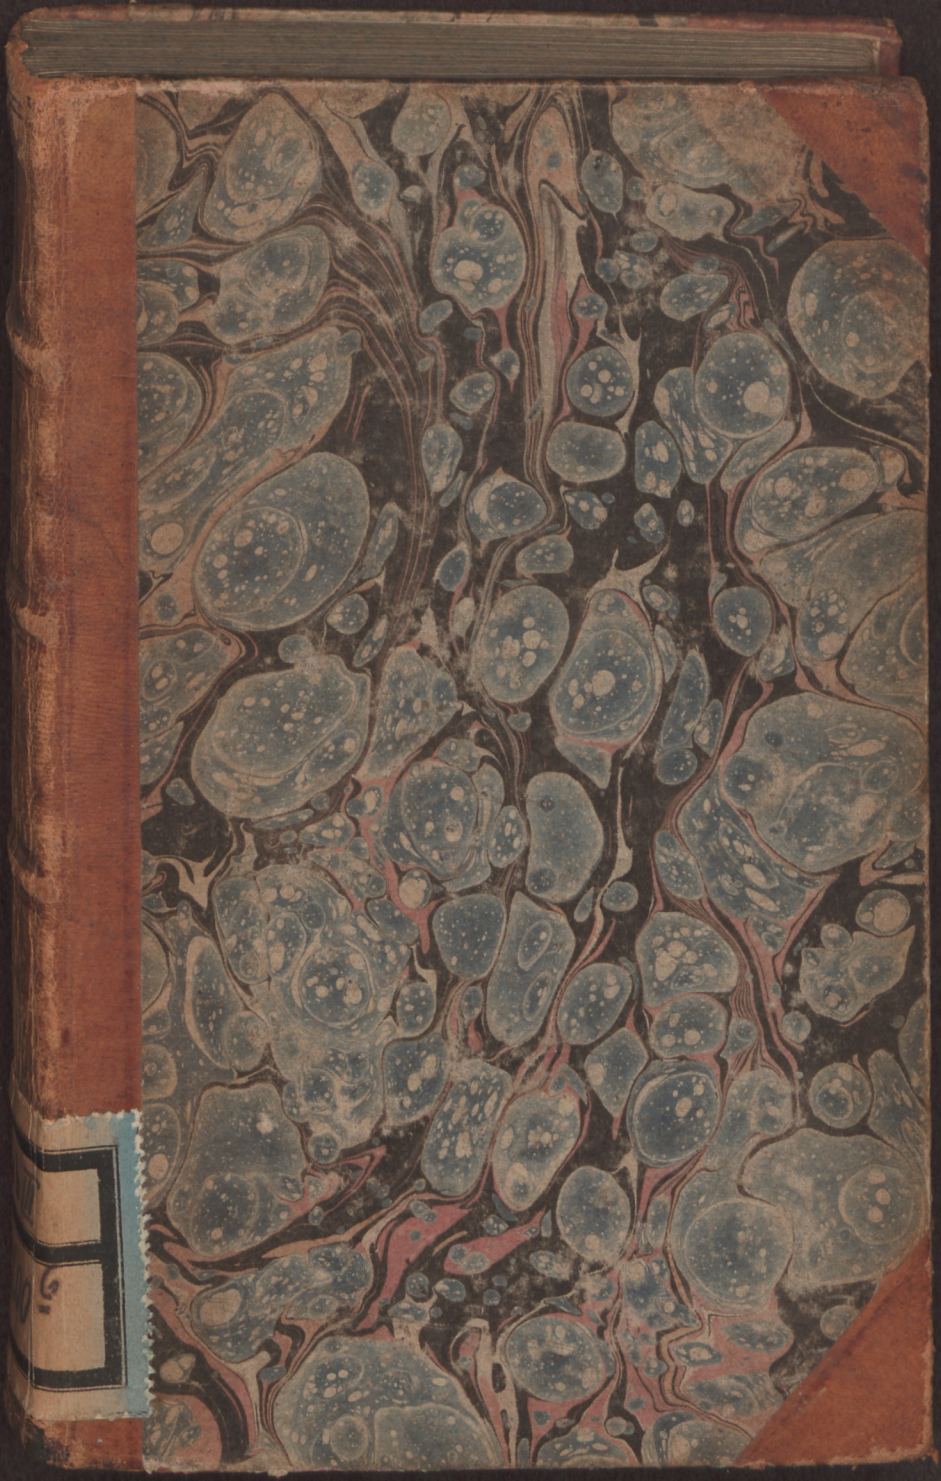

Christoph Daniel Ebeling

Vermischte Aufsätze in englischer Prose : hauptsächlich zum Besten derer welche diese Sprache in Rücksicht auf bürgerliche Geschäfte lernen wollen

Sechste verbesserte Auflage, Hamburg: bei Carl Ernst Bohn, 1794

http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319

Druck Freier Zugang PUBLIC DOMAIN

Landesbibliothek
Mecklenburg-Vorpommern
Günther Uecker

http://purl.uni-rostock.de
/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0001

DFG

1773

L b III
2200 6

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0002
DFG

A NEW

COLLECTION

OF

SELECT PIECES

OF PROSE

Oldenburg
Wismar 1816.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0003
DFG

A NEW COLLECTION
OF SELECT PIECES
IN ENGLISH PROSE.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0005
DFG

Vermiſchte

Aufſätze

in engliſcher Proſe

hauptſächlich zum Beſten derer

welche dieſe Sprache

in Rückſicht auf bürgerliche Geſchäfte lernen wollen,

geſamlet

von

C. D. Ebeling,

Profeſſor am Gymnaſium und Mitvorſteher der Handlungsakademie in Hamburg.

Sechste verbeſſerte Auflage.

Hamburg

bei Carl Ernſt Bohn.

1794.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker

http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0007

DFG

VORREDE.

Die erſte Veranlaſſung, gegenwärtige Samlung drucken zu laſſen, gab mir unſre Handlungsakademie. Ich hatte ſchon lange bemerkt, daſs es an einem Buche fehle, woraus man das Engliſche zum Gebrauche des gemeinen Lebens, zum Sprechen und zu bürgerlichen Geſchäften lernen könte; ſonderlich war für Kaufleute in dieſem Stücke gar nicht geſorgt worden. Tomsons Miſcellanies, Schulzens Originals, u. a. muſten bei dem Unterrichte gebraucht werden, und ob ſie gleich einige ſchöne Aufſätze enthielten, ſo waren doch die meiſten für Ungelehrte gar nicht brauchbar, ſonderlich Tomsons Samlung. Wer wird aus

Abhand-

Abhandlungen von alten Münzen, aus metaphyſiſchen Aufſätzen, aus Predigten, wären ſie auch von dem gröſsten Kanzelredner, u. ſ. w. mit Vergnügen eine Sprache lernen? Und welche Sprache lernt man auch am Ende daraus? Nicht die des Umgangs, nicht die der Geſchäfte, ſondern die redneriſche, gelehrte Bücherſprache.

Meine Abſicht iſt alſo, eine gemeinnützigere Samlung zu liefern. Die Stücke, welche ich gewählt habe, ſind theils beluſtigend, theils ernſthaft. Jene ſollen das Beſchwerliche und Unangenehme, welches bei Erlernung einer Sprache iſt, erleichtern und verſüſſen; dieſe aber den Lehrling, deſſen Neugierde ſie reizen können, näher zu Geſchäften, vornehmlich der Handlung, führen. Die Fabeln, witzigen Einfälle, Todtengeſpräche, die Aufſätze aus dem Grandiſon, Tom Jones, Triſtram Shandy, aus Klinkers und Gullivers Reiſen, und vornehmlich die Scenen aus neuen Luſtſpielen, mögen zum Engliſch-Sprechen Anlaſs geben; zum Theil können ſie auch, nebſt den eingerückten Briefen von Popen, u. a. den Briefſtil bilden helfen. In Anſehung der leztern hätte ich gewünſcht, eigentliche Geſchäfts- und ſonderlich Handlungsbriefe, die Muſter dieſer Schreibart wären, liefern zu können: aber ſo gut iſts mir nicht geworden, dergleichen zu finden; denn ich muſs geſtehen, Popens Briefe, ſo viel ich auch daraus weggelaſſen habe, ſind nicht allerdings leicht und natürlich genug geſchrieben. *) Die übrigen Aufſätze über England, *) Lord Cheſterfields Briefe an ſeinen Sohn, (Letters written by the late Earl of Cheſterfield to his Son. Lond. 1774. 4 Vol. 8.) waren noch nicht heraus, als die erſte Ausgabe dieſes Buchs erſchien, ſonſt würde ich gewiſs davon Gebrauch gemacht haben.

dem

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0011
DFG

land, deſſen Kolonien und Handel, können eine gute Vorbereitung zur Leſung der vielen vortreflichen Werke ſeyn, welche über dieſe Materien in engliſcher Sprache geſchrieben ſind.

Wer ſchon zu einer ernſthaften Lektur gewohnt iſt, dem preiſe ich folgende Samlungen an: The moral Miſcellany, welche zu Leipzig 1784. 8. nachgedruckt iſt; und noch mehr The Beauties of the Engliſh Proſe. London 1772. 4 Octav-Bände. Hat man dann noch Richardsons und Fieldings Romane, Sternens in Altenburg ſchön nachgedruckte Werke, den Adventurer, Connoissevr, Rambler, Spectator, die World und dergleichen geleſen, und will zur Poeſie übergehen, ſo kann der zweite Theil von Tomſons Miſcellanies ſo lange zur Vorbereitung dienen, bis man eine mannigfaltigere, faltigere, beſſere Samlung hat. *) Die engliſchen Dichter, die man leſen ſoll, brauche ich nicht zu nennen: Wer kent nicht Gay, Dryden, Prior, Pope, Thomson, Glover, Young, Milton, Shakespeare, Buttler, Dodsley's Samlung, u. ſ. w.

Auf die Korrektur des Drucks iſt aller mögliche Fleiſs von mir und andern gewandt worden. Die Orthographie eines jeden Schriftſtellers habe ich unverändert beibehalten.

Dieſe

*) Dieſe hat man jezt an O. Goldſmith's Beauties of the engliſh Poeſy collected. Lond. 1767. 2 B. 8v.; des ſel. Duſch Students Miſcellany, Flensburg 1779. 2 Vol. gr. 8.; den Claſſical Extracts or uſeful and entertaining Pieces of poetry. Lond. 1788. gr. 8.; an J. Retzers Choice of the beſt poetical pieces. Vienna 1784. ff. 6 B. 8. nebſt der Samlung des H. Bibliothekar Benzlers: Poetical Library. Leipzig, 1788. 2 B. 8.

Andre klaſſiſche Schriften, hiſtoriſchen und philoſophiſcheu Inhalts, von Robertſon, Gibbon, Ferguſon u. a. m. hat Thurneiſen in Baſel, in ſchönen, wohlfeilen und richtigen Ausgaben geliefert.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0013
DFG

Diese sechste Auflage ist durch die gütige Aufnahme dieser Samlung früher, als ich hoffen konte, veranlasst worden. Ich habe die eingeschlichenen Druckfehler verbessert, und in dem angehängten Wörterverzeichnisse einiges berichtiget. Die Aufsätze selbst habe ich nicht verändern dürfen, weil dies Buch das Glück hat, in Schulen gebraucht zu werden.

INHALT.

1) Fables. S. 1
2) Jests and bons mots. 7
3) An Abridgement of Anderson's Commercial-Geography of Great-Britain and Ireland. 17
4) Lord Littleton's Dialogues of the Death. 33
5) Barretti's Account of the present King of Spain. 53
6) Narrative of the Death of Calas. 59
7) Anson's Voyage to Asia. 67
8) Richardson's Account of Sir Charles Grandison's rescuing Miss Byron. 73
9) Voltaire's Account of a tragical Incident in France. 126
10) Buffon's Description of a Dwarf. 127
11) Hutchinson's Remarks on the present state of the Trade of Massachusetsbay &c. 129
12) Shaw's Account of Algier. 135
13) Account of the Death of Patkul. 142
14) Sterne's Story of le Fever. 149
15) Robertson's Account of the Cardinal Ximenes. 157
16) Account of the Battle of Pavia by the same. 159
17) Character of the Emperor Charles V. by the same. 163
18) Smollet's Satirical Description of London and Bath. 165
19) View of the Climate, Trade and Soil of Barbados. 172

20) The

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0015
DFG

20) The Brothers a Comedy. 174
21) Hawkesworth's new Memorandum-Book for Ladies. 181
22) Character of a Gameſter by the ſame. 185
23) Bancroft's Deſcription of Berbice, Demerary and Eſſequebo. 189
24) Lettres by Pope, Steele, Addiſon, Lord Littleton and others. 199
25) Deſcription of ſome Quadrupeds by Bancroft and Brockes. 217
26) Some Chapters out of Fielding's Hiſtory of Tom Jones. 226
27) Obſervations on the preſent State of the Eaſt-India Company. 236
28) Lady Montague's Deſcription of Adrianople and Conſtantinople. 242
29) Deſcription of Jamaica. 249
30) Scenes out of Colman's Comedy of the jealous Wife. 255
31) Hume's Hiſtory of the invincible Armada. 261
32. 33) Gulliver's Voyage to Liliput and Brobdignac. 271
34) Anderſon's account of England's Trade and Colonies. 282
35) Scenes out of Colman's Comedy of the Engliſh Merchant. 305

FABLES.

FABLES. *)

A COCK and a PRECIOUS STONE.

As a Cock was ſcratching upon a Dunghill, he turned up a precious Stone. Well, ſays he, this ſparkling Foolery to a Jeweler would have been ſomething; but to me, a Barley-Corn is worth an hundred Diamonds.

MORAL.

A wiſe Man will always prefer Things neceſſary before Matters of Curioſity, Ornament, or Pleaſure.

A FROG, MOUSE, and KITE.

There happened once a terrible Quarrel betwixt the Frogs and the Mice, about the Souvereignty of the Fens; and whilſt two of their Champions were diſputing it with their utmoſt Might, down comes a Kite powdering upon them, and gobbles up both together.

A LION, BEAR, and FOX.

A Lion and Bear had ſo long fought over a Fawn which they killed, that they were glad to lie down and take Breath. In which Inſtant, a Fox paſſed that Way; and, finding how the Caſe ſtood with the two Combatants, he ſeized upon the dead Fawn, and ſcampered quite away with him. The Lion and the Bear, not being in Condition to riſe and hinder it, paſs'd this Reflection upon the Matter: Here we have been worrying one another who ſhould have the Booty, till this treacherous Fox has bobb'd us both.

MORAL of the two Fables.

When Fools go together by the Ears, Knaves generally run away with the Stakes.

A A WOLF

*) Aeſop's Fables, with inſtructive Morals and Reflexions. By Mr. Richardſon. Lond. 8. with cuts.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0017
DFG

A WOLF and a CRANE.

A Wolf had got a Bone in his Throat, and promiſed a Crane a very conſiderable Reward to help him out with it. The Crane did him the good Office, and then claim'd his promiſe. Why, how now, Impudence! ſays the other, do you put your Head into the Mouth of a Wolf, and then, when you've brought it out again ſafe and ſound, do you talk of a Reward? Why, Sirrah, you have your Head again; and is not that a ſufficient Recompence?

Moral.

He that has to do with wild Beaſts (as ſome Men are no better) and eſcapes with a whole Skin, let him think himſelf well off.

A LION and an ASS.

An Aſs was ſo hardy once, as to fall a mocking and braying at a Lion. The Lion began at firſt to ſhew his Teeth, and to ſtomach the Affront; but upon ſecond Thoughts, Well, ſays he, jeer on, and be an Aſs ſtill; take notice only by the way, that it is the Baſeneſs of your Character that has ſaved your Carcaſe.

Moral.

It is below the Dignity of a great Mind to hold Conteſts with People that have neither Quality nor Courage; to ſay nothing of the Folly of contending with a miſerable Wretch, where the very Competition is a Scandal.

A LION and a MOUSE.

A generous Lion, having got into his Clutches a poor Mouſe, at her earneſt Supplication let her go. A few Days after, the Lion, being hampered in a Net, found the Benefit of his former Mercy; for this very Mouſe, in his Diſtreſs, remembring the Favour done her, ſet herſelf to work upon the Couplings of the Net, gnawed the Threads to Pieces, and ſo delivered her Preſerver.

Moral.

It holds through the whole Scale of the Creation, that the Great and Little have need of one another.

The

The KITE, HAWK, and PIGEONS.

The Pigeons, finding themſelves perſecuted by the Kite, made choice of the Hawk for their Guardian. The Hawk ſets up for their Protector; but, under the Countenance of that Authority, inſtead of carrying on a War with the Kite, makes more Havock in the Dovehouſe in two Days, than the Kite could have done in as many Months.

Moral.

It is a dangerous thing for People to call in a powerful and ambitious Man for their Protector.

A DOG and a THIEF.

As a Gang of Thieves were at work to rob a Houſe, a Maſtiff took the Alarm, and fell a barking: One of the Company ſpoke him fair, and would have ſtopt his Mouth with a Cruſt. No, ſays the Dog, this will not do, for I'll take no Bribes to betray my Maſter; nor will I, for a Piece of Bread in Hand, forfeit the Eaſe, Satisfaction, and Liberty of my whole Life.

Moral.

Fair Words, Preſents, and Flatteries, are always to be ſuſpected to cover a baſe and wicked Intent.

A MOUNTAIN in Labour.

A Rumour went that the Mountain was in Labour, and all the Neighbourhood got together to ſee what a monſtrous Iſſue ſo great a Mother would bring forth; when, behold! of a ſudden, out run a ridiculous Mouſe.

Moral.

Nothing ſo much expoſes Man to Ridicule, as when, by vain Bluſters, he raiſes the Expectation of all around him, and falls ſhort in his Performances.

An ASS, an APE, and a MOLE.

An Aſs and an Ape were conferring on Grievances. The Aſs complain'd mightily for want of Horns, and the Ape was as much troubled for want of a Tail. Hold your Tongues, both of ye, ſays the Mole and be thankful for what you have; for the poor blind Moles are in a worſe Condition than either of ye.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0019
DFG

The HARES and the FROGS.

Once upon a Time the Hares found themſelves mightily unſatisfied with the miſerable Condition they lived in. Here we live, ſays one of them, at the Mercy of Men, Dogs, Eagles, and I know not how many other Creatures, which prey upon us at Pleaſure; perpetually in Frights, perpetually in Danger; and therefore I am abſolutely of Opinion, that we had better die, once for all, than live at this Rate in a continual Dread that's worſe than Death itſelf. The Motion was ſeconded and debated, and a Reſolution immediately taken, One and All, to drown themſelves. The Vote was no ſooner paſſ'd, but away they ſcudded with that Determination to the next Lake. Upon this Hurry there leapt a whole Shoal of Frogs from the Bank into the Water, for fear of the Hares. Nay then, my Maſters, ſays one of the graveſt of the Company, pray let's have a little Patience. Our Condition, I find, is not altogether ſo bad as we fancy'd it; for there are thoſe, you ſee, that are as much afraid of us as we are of others.

Moral of the two Fables.

There is no contending with the Ordres and Decrees of Providence. He that made us, knows what is fitteſt for us; and every Man's own Lot (well underſtood and managed) is undoubtedly the beſt.

A DAW and BORROW'D FEATHERS.

A Daw that had a Mind to be ſparkiſh, trick'd himſelf up with all the gay Feathers he could muſter together; and valued himſelf upon them above all the Birds in the Air. This got him the Envy of all his Companions, who, upon a Diſcovery of the Truth, fell to pluming of him by Conſent; and when every Bird had taken his own Feather, the ſilly Daw was reduced to his primitive State, and found a laſting Contempt added to his former Poverty.

Moral.

Where Pride and Beggary meet, People are ſure to be made ridiculous in the Concluſion.

A FROG and a OX.

As a huge Ox was grazing in a Meadow, an old envious Frog that ſtood gaping at him hard by, called out to her little ones, to take Notice of the Bulk of that monſtrous Beaſt;

Beaſt; and ſee, ſays ſhe, if I don't now make myſelf the bigger of the Two: So ſhe ſtrain'd once, and twice, and went ſtill ſwelling on, till in the Concluſion ſhe over-ſtrained herſelf, and burſt.

MORAL.

Weak Minds frequently fancy themſelves to be bigger or worthier than they are, and other People to be leſs or more unworthy; and the Conſequence of this wretched Pride is often fatal to the Poſſeſſors of it, or at leaſt ſerves to render them contemptible in the Eyes of thoſe, whoſe good Opinion they are fondeſt to engage.

The BELLY and MEMBERS.

The Hands and the Feet on a Time were in a deſperate Mutiny againſt the Belly. They knew no Reaſon, they ſaid, why the one ſhould pamper itſelf with the Fruit of the other's Labour; and if the Belly would not work for Company, they'd be no longer at the Charge of maintaining it. Upon this Mutiny, they kept the Body ſo long without Nouriſhment, that all the Parts ſuffer'd for it: inſomuch that the Hands and Feet came in the Concluſion to find their Miſtake, and would have been willing then to have done their Office; but it was now too late, for the Body was ſo pin'd with overfaſting, that it was wholly out of Condition to receive the Benefit of a Relief: and ſo they all periſh'd together.

MORAL.

The Publick is but one Body, and the Fable cautions the particular Members of it, how they withdraw themſelves from their Duties, till it ſhall be too late for their Superiors to make uſe of them for their mutual Advantage.

A LADEN ASS and a HORSE

As an Horſe and an Aſs were upon the Way together, the Aſs cry'd out to his Companion to eaſe him of his Burden, though never ſo little; he ſhould fall down dead elſe. The Horſe would not; and ſo his Fellow Servant ſunk under his Load. The Maſter, upon this, had the Aſs flayed, and laid his whole Pack, Skin and all, upon the Horſe: Well, ſays he, this Judgment is befallen me for my ill Nature, in refuſing to help my Brother in the Depth of his Diſtreſs.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0021
DFG

MORAL.

It is a chriſtian, a natural, a reaſonable, and a political Duty, for all Members of the ſame Body to aſſiſt one another.

A COLLIER and FULLER.

A Fuller had a very kind Invitation from a Collier to come and live in the Houſe with him. He gave him a thouſand Thanks for his Civility, but told him, that it would not ſtand with his Convenience, for, ſays he, as faſt as I make any Thing clean, you'll be ſmutting it again.

MORAL.

It is a neceſſary Rule in Alliances, Matches, Societies, Fraternities, Friendſhips, Partnerſhips, Commerce, and all manner of civil Dealings and Contracts, to have a ſtrict Regard to the Humor, the Nature, and the Diſpoſition of thoſe we have to do withal.

A BOY and FALSE ALARMS.

A Shepherd's Boy had gotten a roguiſh Trick of crying, A Wolf! a Wolf! when there was no ſuch Matter, and fooling the Country-people with falſe Alarms. He had been at this Sport ſo many Times in Jeſt, that they would not believe him at laſt, when he was in Earneſt; and ſo the Wolves broke in upon the Flock, and worry'd the Sheep without Reſiſtance.

MORAL.

This Fable ſhews us the dangerous Conſequences of an improper and unſeaſonable Fooling. The old Moral obſerves, That a common Lyar ſhall not be believ'd, even when he ſpeaks true.

A SHEEP and a CROW.

A Crow ſat chattering upon the Back of a Sheep: Well? Sirrah, ſays the Sheep you durſt not have done this to a Dog. Why, I know that, ſays the Crow, as well as you can tell me; for I can be as quiet as any body with thoſe that are quarrelſome; and I can be as troubleſome as another too, when I meet with thoſe that will take it.

MORAL.

It is the Nature and Practice of mean and low Spirits, to be inſolent towards thoſe that will bear it, and as ſlaviſh to others that are more than their Match.

A FOX

A FOX and HUNTSMEN.

A Fox that was hard purſu'd, begg'd of a Countryman to help him to ſome Hiding-place. The Man directed him to his Cottage, and thither he went. The Huntſmen were preſently at his Heels, and aſked the Cottager, if he did not ſee a Fox that Way? No, truly, ſays he, I ſaw none; but pointed at the ſame time with his Finger to the Place where he lay. The Huntſmen did not take the Hint, it ſeems; but the Fox ſpy'd him, however, through a Peeping-Hole he had found out: So the Hunters went their Way, and then out ſteals the Fox, and departs without one Word ſpeaking. Why, how now, ſays the Man, han't you the Manners to thank me before you go? Yes, yes, ſays the Fox, if you had been as honeſt with your Fingers as you were with your Tongue, I ſhould not have gone without acknowledging the Favour.

MORAL.

A Man may tell a Lie by Signs, as well as in Words at Length; and his Conſcience in this Caſe is as anſwerable for his Fingers as for his Tongue.

A SWALLOW and a CROW.

A Crow diſputing with a Swallow for the prize of Beauty, ſaid, Yours, at beſt is only a Spring Beauty; mine laſts all the Year round.

MORAL.

A durable Good is infinitely to be preferred to a tranſitory one.

JESTS AND BONS MOTS.

1. Upon the Death of the famous Moliere, a poet waiting with his epitaph upon the Prince of Condé, the Prince told him, he ſhould have been much better pleaſed, if Moliere had brought him his.

2. A brave Dutch Captain being commanded by his Colonel to go on a dangerous Exploit againſt the French, with Forces that were unlikely to atchieve the Enterprize, the Captain advis'd his Colonel to ſend but half ſo many Men:

Why ſo, ſaid the Colonel, to ſend but half ſo many Men? Becauſe, replied the Captain, they are enough to be knock'd on the Head.

3. The famous Mr. Amner going through a Street in Windſor, two Boys looked out of a One-Pair-of-Stairs Window, and cry'd, There goes Mr. Amner that makes ſo many Bulls. He hearing them, look'd up, ſaying, You Raſcals, I know you well enough, and if I had you here, I'd kick you down Stairs.

4. A Fellow hearing the Drums beat up for Volunteers for France, in the Expedition againſt the Dutch, imagin'd himſelf valiant enough, and thereupon liſted himſelf; returning again, he was aſk'd by his Friends, What Exploits he had done there? He ſaid: That he had cut off one of the Enemy's Legs; and being told that it had been more honourable and manly to have cut of his Head: Oh, ſaid he, you muſt know his Head was cut off before.

5. A rich Farmer's Son, who had been bred at the Univerſity, coming home to viſit his Father and Mother, they being one Night at Supper on a Couple of Fowls, he told them, that by Logic and Arithmetic, he could prove thoſe two Fowls to be three. Well, let us hear, ſaid the old Man. Why this, cry'd the Scholar, is one, and this, continu'd he, is two, two and one, you know, make three. Since you have made it out ſo well, anſwer'd the old Man, your Mother ſhall have the Firſt Fowl, I will have the Second, and the Third you may keep yourſelf for your great Learning.

6. Somebody aſked my Lord Bacon what he thought of Poets? Why, ſaid he, I think them the very beſt Writers next to thoſe who write in Proſe.

7. A Gentleman, who had been a great Traveller, would oftentimes talk ſo extravagantly of the wonderful Things he had ſeen abroad, that a Friend of his took Notice to him of his expoſing himſelf as he did to all Companies, and aſk'd him the Meaning of it? Why ſays the Traveller, I have got ſuch a Habit of Lying ſince I have been abroad, that I really hardly know when I lye, and when I ſpeak Truth; and ſhould be very much oblig'd to you, if you would tread upon my Toe at any Time, when I am likely to give myſelf too much Liberty that Way. His Friend promis'd he would, and accordingly, not long after, being at a Tavern with him and other Company, when the Traveller was, amongſt other other ſtrange Things, giving an Account of a Church he had ſeen in Italy, that was above two Miles long, he trod on his Toe, juſt as one of the Company had aſk'd, How broad that ſame Church might be? Oh, ſaid he, not above two Feet. Upon which, the Company burſting into a loud Laugh; Zounds, ſaid he, if you had not trod upon my Toe, I ſhould have made it as broad as it was long.

8. A Countryman ſowing his Ground, two ſmart Fellows riding that Way, one of them called to him with an inſolent Air: Well, honeſt Fellow, ſaid he, 'tis your Buſineſs to ſow, but we reap the Fruits of your Labour. To which the Countryman replied, 'Tis very likely you may, truly; for I am ſowing Hemp.

9. A certain great Lord having, by his extravagancies, run himſelf over head and ears in debt, and ſeeming very little concerned about it, one of his friends told him one day, That he wondered how he could ſleep quietly in his bed, whilſt he was ſo much in debt. For my part, ſaid my lord, I ſleep very well; but I wonder how my creditors can.

10. King William III. being upon a march for ſome ſecret expedition, was intreated by a General to tell him what his deſign was: The King, inſtead of anſwering him, aſk'd him, whether, in caſe he ſhould tell him, he could keep it a ſecret, and would let it go no farther; the General promiſed, it ſhould not. Well, anſwered his Majeſty, I know how to keep a ſecret as well as you.

11. Cato, the Cenſor, being aſk'd, How it came to paſs, that he had no Statue erected for him, who had ſo well deſerved of the Common-wealth? I had rather, ſaid he, have this Queſtion aſk'd, than Why I had one?

12. King Henry VIII. deſigning to ſend a Nobleman on an Embaſſy to Francis I. at a very dangerous Juncture, he begg'd to be excus'd, ſaying ſuch a threatning Meſſage to ſo hot a Prince as Francis I. might go near to coſt him his Life. Fear not, ſaid old Harry, if the French King ſhould offer to take away your Life, I would revenge you by taking off the Heads of many Frenchmen now in my Power. But of all theſe Heads, replied the Nobleman, there may not be one to fit my Shoulders.

13. Some repartees, if, ſtrictly ſpeaking, not to be brought under the head of jeſts, yet, for the readineſs of the thought and the politeneſs of the expreſſion, are ſomewhat better. Of this ſort was the anſwer made by Sir Robert Sutton to the late King of Pruſſia, on his aſking him at a review of his tall grenadiers, if he would ſay an equal number of Engliſhmen could beat them? No, Sir, anſwered Sir Robert, I won't pretend to ſay that, but I believe half the number would try.

14. A Gaſcon Officer, who had ſerv'd under Henry IV. King of France, and not having receiv'd any Pay for a conſiderable Time, came to the King, and confidently ſaid to him, Sir, three Words with your Majeſty. Money or Diſcharge. Four with you, anſwer'd his Majeſty, Neither one, nor t'other.

15 Villiers, the witty and extravagant Duke of Buckingham, in King Charles IId's Time, was ſaying one Day to Sir Robert Viner, in a melancholic Humour, I am afraid, Sir Robert, I ſhall die a Beggar at laſt, which is the moſt terrible Thing in the World: Upon my Word, my Lord, ſaid Sir Robert, there is another Thing more terrible which you have Reaſon to apprehend, and that is, That you will live a Beggar, at the Rate you go on.

16. The ſame noble Duke, another Time, was making his Complaint to Sir John Cutler, a rich Miſer, of the Diſorder of his Affairs, and aſk'd him what he ſhould do to prevent the Ruin of his Eſtate? Live as I do, my Lord, ſaid Sir John; That I can do, anſwer'd the Duke, when I am ruined.

17. A pragmatical young fellow, ſitting at Table over againſt the learned John Scot, asked him, What Difference there was between Scot and Sot? Juſt the Breadth of the Table, anſwered the other.

18. A Gentleman, having lent a Guinea for two or three Days to a perſon whoſe Promiſes he had not much Faith in, was very much ſurpriz'd to find, that he very punctually kept his Word with him; the ſame Gentleman being ſome Time after deſirous of borrowing a larger Sum, No, ſaid the other, you have deceived me once, and I am reſolved you ſhall not do it a ſecond Time.

19. Three or four roguiſh Scholars walking out one Day from the Univerſity of Oxford, eſpy'd a poor Fellow near Abingdon, aſleep in a Ditch, with an Aſs by him laden with Earthen Ware, holding the Bridle in his Hand; ſays one of the Scholars to the reſt, If you will aſſiſt me, I'll help you to a little Money, for you know we are bare at preſent: No doubt of it they were not long conſenting: Why then, ſaid he, we'll go and ſell this old Fellow's Aſs at Abingdon; for you know the Fair is To-morrow and we ſhall meet with Chapmen enough; therefore, do you take the Panniers off, and put them upon my Back, and that Bridle over my Head, and then lead the Aſs to Market, and let me alone with the old Man. This being done accordingly, in a little Time after the poor Man waking, was ſtrangely ſurprized to ſee his Aſs thus metamorphoſed: Oh! for Heaven's Sake, ſaid the Scholar, take this Bridle out of my Mouth, and this Load from my Back. Zoons, how came you here, replied the old Man? Why, ſaid he, my Father, who is a Necromancer, upon an idle Thing I did to diſoblige him, transformed me into an Aſs; but now his Heart has relented, and I am come to my own Shape again, I beg you will let me go home and thank him: By all Means, ſaid the Crockery-Merchant, I do not deſire to have any thing to do with Conjuration; and ſo ſet the Scholar at Liberty, who went directly to his Comrades, that by this Time were making merry with the Money they had ſold the Aſs for. But the old Fellow was forced to go the next Day to ſeek for a new one in the Fair, and after having looked on ſeveral, his own was ſhewn him for a very good one: Oh! Oh! ſaid he, what! have he and his Father quarrelled again already? No, no, I'll have nothing to ſay to him.

to

20. A witty Knave coming into a Lace-ſhop upon Ludgate-hill, ſaid, He had Occaſion for a ſmall Quantity of very fine Lace, and having pitched upon that he liked, aſk'd the Woman of the Shop, how much ſhe would have for as much as would reach from one of his Ears to the other, and meaſure which Way ſhe pleaſed, either over his Head, or under his Chin: After ſome Words they agreed, and he paid the Money down, and began to meaſure, ſaying, One of my Ears is here, and the other is nailed to the Pillory in Briſtol, therefore I fear you have not enough to make good your Bargain; however, I will take this Piece in Part, and deſire you will provide the reſt with all Expedition.

21. A Lady's Age happening to be queſtion'd, ſhe affirm'd ſhe was but Forty, and call'd upon a Gentleman, who was in Company, for his Opinion: Couſin, ſaid ſhe, do you believe I am in the right, when I ſay I am but Forty? I am ſure, ſure, Madam, reply'd he, I ought not to diſpute it; for I have conſtantly heard you ſay ſo for above theſe ten Years.

22. A Lieutenant-colonel to one of the Iriſh Regiments in the French Service, being diſpatched by the Duke of Berwick, from Fort-Kehl, to the King of France, with a Complaint relating to ſome Irregularities that had happen'd in the Regiment, his Majeſty, with ſome Emotion of Mind, told him, that the Iriſh Troops gave him more Uneaſineſs than all his Forces beſides. Sir, ſays the Officer, all your Majeſty's Enemies make the ſame Complaint.

23. Mr. C—n, the Surgeon, being ſent for to a Gentleman who had juſt received a ſlight Wound in a Rencounter, gave Orders to his Servant to go home with all Haſte imaginable, and fetch a certain Plaiſter; the Patient turning a little pale, Lord, Sir, ſaid he, I hope there is no Danger? Yes, indeed is there, anſwered the Surgeon, for if the Fellow don't ſet up a good Pair of Heels, the Wound will heal before he returns.

24. A profligate young Nobleman, being in Company with ſome ſober People, deſired Leave to toaſt the Devil. The Gentleman, who ſat next to him, ſaid, He had no Objection to any of his Lordſhip's Friends.

25. The late Colonel Chartres reflecting on his ill Life and Character, told a certain Nobleman, That if ſuch a Thing as a good Name was to be purchaſed, he would freely give 10,000 Pounds for one. The Nobleman ſaid, It would certainly be the worſt Money he ever laid out in his Life. Why ſo, ſaid the honeſt Colonel? Becauſe anſwered the Lord, you would forfeit it again in leſs than a Week.

26. One ſaying that Mr. Dennis was an excellent Critic, was anſwered, That indeed his Writings were much to be valued; for that by his Criticiſm he taught Men how to write well; and by his Poetry ſhew'd them what is was to write ill; ſo that the World was ſure to edify by him.

27. The late earl of S— kept an Iriſh Footman, who, perhaps, was as expert in making Bulls as the moſt learned of his Countrymen. My Lord having ſent him one Day with a Preſent to a certain Judge, the Judge in Return ſent my Lord half a Dozen live Partridges with a Letter; the Partridges fluttering in the Baſket upon Teague's Back, as he was carrying them home, he ſet down the Baſket, and opened the Lid of it to quiet them, whereupon they all flew away. Oh! the Devil burn ye, said he, I am glad you are gone; but when he came home, and my Lord had read the Letter, Why Teague, said my Lord, I find there are half a Dozen Partridges in the Letter Now, Arrah, dear Honey, said Teague, I am glad you have found them in the Letter, for they are all loſt out of the Baſket.

Lid

28. The ſame Nobleman going out one Day, called Teague to the Side of his Chariot, and bade him tell Mr. Such-a-one, if he came, that he ſhould be at home at Dinner. But when my Lord was got acroſs the Square in which he lived, Teague came puffing after him, and calling to the Coachman to ſtop; upon which my Lord, pulling the String, deſired to know what Teague wanted: My Lord, ſaid he, you bade me tell Mr. Such-a-one, if he came, that you would dine at home; but what muſt I ſay if he don't come?

29. Two inſeparable Comrades in the Guards in Flanders, had every thing in common between them. One of them being an extravagant Fellow, and unfit to be truſted with Money, the other was always Purſe-bearer, which yet he gained little by, for the former would at Night frequently pick his Pocket to the leaſt Stiver; to prevent which, he bethought himſelf of a Stratagem; and coming among his Companions the next Day, he told them he had bit his Comrade. Ay, how? ſaid they. Why, replied he, I hid my Money in his own Pocket laſt Night, and I am ſure he would never look for it there.

30. A Fellow once ſtanding in the Pillory at Temple-Bar, it occaſion'd a Stop, ſo that a Carman with a Load of Cheeſes had much ado to paſs; and driving juſt up to the Pillory, he aſk'd, What that was that was wrote over the Perſon's Head? They told him, it was a Paper to ſignify his Crime, that he ſtood there for Forgery. Ay, ſaid he, What is Forgery? They anſwer'd him, That Forgery was counterfeiting another's Hand, with intent to cheat People. To which the Carman replied, looking up at the Offender: Oh, Pox, this comes of your Writing and Reading, you ſilly Dog.

31. Alphonſo, King of Naples, ſent a Moor, who had been his Captive a long Time, to Barbary, with a conſiderable Sum of Money to purchaſe Horſes, and to return by ſuch a Time. There was about the King a Buffoon, or Jeſter, who had a Table-Book, wherein he uſed to regiſter any

any remarkable Absurdity that happened at Court. The Day the Moor was dispatch'd to Barbary, the said Jester waiting on the King at Supper, the King called for his Table-book; in which the Jester kept a regular Journal of Absurdities. The King took the Book and read, How Alphonso, King of Naples, had sent Beltram the Moor, who had been a long Time his Prisoner, to Morocco, his own Country, with so many thousand Crowns to buy Horses. The King turn'd to the Jester, and ask'd, Why he inserted that? Because, said he, I think he will never come back to be a Prisoner again; and so you have lost both Man and Money: But, if he does come, says the King, then your Jest is marr'd: No, Sir, replies the Buffoon, for if he should return, I will blot out your Name, and put in his for a Fool.

32. A Lady whose Beauty was very much upon the Decline, having sent her Picture to a Gentleman that was to come a wooing to her, bid her Chambermaid, when she was coming to dress her, take Care in repairing her Decays a little, or she should not look like her Picture. I warrant you, Madam, says she, laying on the Bavarian Red, a little Art once made your Picture like you, now a little of the same Art shall make you like your Picture; your Picture must sit to you.

33. A certain Philosopher, when he saw Men in a Hurry to finish any Matter, us'd to say, Stay a little, that we may make an End the sooner.

34. A Gentleman complaining of a Misfortune, said, it was along with that drunken Sot his Man, who could not keep himself sober. With Respect to your Worship, said the Fellow, I know very few drunken Sots that do keep themselves sober.

35. A certain Irishman making strong Love to a great Fortune, told her, He could not sleep for dreaming of her.

36. A certain preacher held forth at St. Mary, without giving his auditory any satisfaction. Santeuil, the celebrated Poet who was present, said, "He did better last year." A by-stander asserted he must be mistaken; for the present pulpit thumper had not preached last year. "That is the very reason," said Santeuil.

37. A simple Bumpkin, coming to London, was very much taken with the Sight of a Chair, or Sedan, and bargained with the Chairman to carry him to a Place he named. The Chairmen, Chairmen, obſerving the Curioſity of the Clown to be ſuitable to the Meanneſs of his Habit, privately took out the Bottom of the Chair, and then put him into it, which, when they took up, the Countryman's Feet were upon the Ground, and as the Chairmen advanced, ſo did he; and to make the better Sport, if any Place was dirtier in the Way than the reſt, that they choſe to go through; the Countryman not knowing but others uſed to be carried, or rather driven in the ſame Manner, coming to his Lodgings, gave them their Demand. Returning into the Country, he related what rare Things he had ſeen in London and withal, that he had been carried in a Sedan; Sedan quoth one, What is that? Why, ſaid he, like our Watch Houſe, only it is covered with Leather; but were it not for the Name of a Sedan, a Man might as well walk on Foot.

38. An impudent ridiculous fellow, being laughed at by all who came in his company, told ſome of his acquaintance, that he had a happy quality of laughing at all who laughed at him. Then, ſaid one of them, you lead the merrieſt life of any man in Chriſtendom.

39. Alexander the Great aſk'd Diomedes, a famous pirate, who was brought priſoner to him, why he was ſo bold as to rob and plunder in his ſeas? he anſwered, that he did it for his profit, and as Alexander himſelf was uſed to do it. But becauſe I do it with one ſingle galley, I am called a Pirate; but you, Sir, who do it with a great army, are called a King. This bold anſwer ſo pleaſed Alexander, that he ſet him at liberty.

40. The duke of Guiſe, after a battle fought between Francis I. and Charles V. reproach'd one Villandry, that tho' he was in compleat armour, yet he had not been ſeen in the fight. I'll make it out, anſwered Villandry, boldly, that I was there, and in a place where you durſt not be ſeen. The duke, nettled at this reproach, threatened to puniſh him ſeverely; but he appeaſed him with theſe words: I was, my Lord, with the baggage? where your courage would not ſuffer you to go.

41. One who had formerly been rich, but had ſquandered away his eſtate, and left himſelf no furniture in the houſe but a ſorry bed, a little table, a few broken chairs, and ſome other odd things, ſeeing a parcel of thieves, who knew not his condition, breaking into his houſe in the night, he cried out to them, Are not you a damn'd pack of fools, to think to find any thing here in the dark, when I can find nothing by day-light?

42. Poor Joe Miller going one day along the Strand, an impudent Derby captain came ſwaggering up to him, and thruſt between him and the wall. I don't uſe to give the wall, ſaid he, to every jackanapes. But I do, ſaid Joe; and ſo made way for him.

43. When his late Royal Highneſs the Duke of Cumberland arrived at Portſmouth, to ſee the Fleet, he ſtood talking to one of the Admirals with his Hat on; upon which a Sailor, who was at a little Diſtance, hailed his Meſs-mate, Jack! Jack, ſays he, there's a Sight for ye; ſee, there's a Man talks to the Admiral with his Hat on! Why, you Fool, anſwered the other, how ſhould he know Good-manners, he never was at Sea.

44. I never laughed more than at the Simplicity of a man in the North, who had entered into a Manufactury without any Knowledge of Buſineſs, and traded away a good Fortune without knowing how to draw even a Bill of Exchange. This honeſt Man had long owed my Friend Mr  a Hundred Pound, which he had often aſked for in vain; at laſt meeting with him one Day in Company, he aſked him why he did not pay him the Money? Becauſe I have none, Maſter, anſwered the other. Well, but Thomas, replied my Friend, if you have no Money, perhaps you may give me a Bill upon Somebody in London. Yes, Maſter, that I will do with all my Heart, replied the other with great Simplicity; ſit down and write it, Maſter, for you can write better than I. My Friend ſat down to draw the Bill, greatly rejoiced with an opportunity of getting his Money; and when he had done, Thomas, ſays he, I have drawn the Bill a Month after Date, now who ſhall I addreſs it to, that is, who ſhall I direct it to for Payment? Whom you pleaſe, Maſter, anſwered the poor Man, you know more People in London than I do.

45. A Gentleman, who was declaiming before a large Audience, having a bad Memory, was at a Stand, and in a low Voice deſired his Friend, who ſtood by, to help him out. No, ſays the other, methinks you are out enough already.

An

AN ABRIDGEMENT OF ANDERSON'S COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY OF GREAT-BRITAIN AND IRELAND. *)

The Island of Great-Britain may be considered both in a geographical and mercantile Sense, as comprehending two distinct Parts, viz. England the richer and greater, and Scotland the smaller and less considerable Part: although in a political Sense those two Parts have been indissolubly united sixty-seven Years ago.

I. England is the more level and fertile Part of this noble Island, and Scotland more mountainous, and in its Northern and North-western Parts more cold and barren, though enjoying a more pure and healthy Air. England is often subject to Damps, Fogs, and much variable Weather; yet the Country is uncommonly fertile, almost always abounding in Plenty of Corn, and excellent Vegetables and Fruit; in Cyder, Perry, Saffron, Liquorice, Woad, excellent Timber both for House and Ship Building, as also for Fuel; almost inexhaustible Pit-coal; the finest Pastures, Horses, and horned Cattle; and Sheep, a most profitable Article beyond any other, on Account of the noblest Manufacture upon Earth. England's Mines and Manufactures are also very considerable; and her Tin-Mines of Cornwall have not their Perallel in any other Part of Europe, nor perhaps in the whole World. In her Mountains are found Marble, Alabaster, Crystal, Alum, and Vitriol; her Sea-Coasts and Rivers abound in the greatest Quantities of the best Kinds of Fish. II. In Scotland they are making many Improvements in Agriculture, and in the greater Production of Hemp and Flax, for farther increasing their already extensive very fine and valuable Linen Manufacture. It also abounds in horned Cattle, Sheep, and a smaller Breed of hardy Horses; in vast Quantities of Pit-coal, better than that of England; and in Plenty of Lead, of Salmon in its Rivers, and an inexhaustible Abundance of Fish in her Seas. III. Ireland, though abounding in Lakes and Bogs, is nevertheless a noble Island. Agriculture is beginning to be improved, and its Cultivation of Hemp, and yet more of Flax, is become very considerable; also her Linen Manufacture is grown almost to be a Prodigy, even in a few Years Space. —

*) Anderson's Historical Deduction of the Origin of Commerce &c. London 1764. fol. Vol. II. (1787. IV Vol. 4.)

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0033
DFG

Dr. Busching makes the Inhabitants of Great-Britain amount to nine Millions, which is probably near the Truth; and the People of Ireland are nearly computed at 2,250,000. — England's foreign Commerce is immenſe!

1. To Turkey, England ſends Woollen Cloths, Tin, Lead, and Iron, ſolely in her own Shipping; and brings thence Raw-Silk, Carpets, Galls, and other dying Drugs, Cotton, Fruits, medicinal Drugs, Coffee, &c. Dr. Buſching relates, that a very eminent Turkey Merchant at London aſſured him, That the Balance of this Trade in England's Favour was, to his certain Knowledge, near 600,000 l. per Annum; which we heartily wiſh may be true! though we have too much Ground to doubt it. 2. To Italy, England exports Woollen Goods of various Kinds, Peltry, Leather, Lead, Tin, Fiſh, and Eaſt-India Goods; and brings back raw and thrown Silk, Wines, Oil, Soap, Olives, Oranges, Lemons, Pomegranates, dried Fruits, Colours, Anchovies, &c. And the ſaid Author thinks, the Balance of this Trade, in Favour of Italy, cannot be leſs than 200,000 l. per Annum. 3. To Spain, England ſends all Kinds of Woollen Goods, Leather, Lead, Tin, Fiſh, Corn, Iron, and Braſs Manufactures, Haberdaſhery Wares, Aſſortments of Linen from Germany and elſewhere for her American Colonies; and receives in return, Wines, Oils, dried Fruits, Oranges, Lemons, Olives, Wools, Indigo, Cochineal, and other dying Drugs, Colours, Gold and Silver Coin, &c. And is, doubtleſs, a gainful Trade for England, though not ſo greatly ſo as it was formerly, before other Nations, and more eſpecially France, interfered ſo much of late Years. 4. To Portugal, England ſends moſtly the ſame Kinds of Merchandize as to Spain; and makes Returns in vaſt Quantities of Wines, with Oils, Salt, dried and moiſt Fruits, dying Drugs, and Gold Coins; and, undoubtedly, much to England's Advantage. 5. To France, England ſends much Tobacco, Lead, Tin, Flanels, Horns, and ſometimes Corn; and always much Money at the Long-run. And brings Home, in a ſmuggling Way, a much greater Value in Wines, Brandies, Linen, Cambricks, Lace, Velvets, and many other prohibited Fopperies, Brocades, &c. always very conſiderably to England's Diſadvantage. But as there is no commercial Treaty ſubſiſting between England and France not even in Time of Peace, England's juſt Loſs cannot be aſcertained.

6. To Flanders, England ſends Serges, Flanels, Tin, Lead, Sugars, and Tobacco; and makes Returns in fine Lace, Linen, Cambricks, Cambricks, &c. to England's Disadvantage (according to Dr. Busching) to the Amount of 250,000 l. Sterling yearly. 7. To Germany, England sends Cloths and Stuffs, Tin, Pewter, Sugars, Tobacco, and East-India Merchandize: And brings thence vast Quantities of Linen, Thread, Goats-skins, Tinned-plates, Timber for all Uses, Wines, and many other Articles: And Dr. Busching thinks the Balance against England may amount annually to 500,000 l. 8. To Norway, England sends a small Quantity of Tobacco, and of Woollen Stuffs; and (it is said) 150,000 l. in Money; and brings thence vast Quantities of Deal and other Timber. 9. To Sweden, England sends some few Manufactures, and about 200,000 l. annually in Money; and brings back from thence much Iron, Timber, Tar, Copper, &c. 10. To Russia, England sends Woollen Cloth and Stuffs, Tin, Lead, Tobacco, Diamonds, Household Furniture &c.; and makes Returns in Hemp, Flax, Linen, Thread, Furs, Pot-asch, Iron, Wax, Tallow, &c. And by this Trade England loses (according to the Opinion of some) 400,000 l. annually. 11. To Holland, England sends an immense Quantity of many Sorts of Merchandize; such as all Kinds of Woollen Goods, Hides, Corn, Coals, East-India and Turkey Merchandize, Tobacco, Tar, Sugar, Rice, Ginger, and other American Productions: And makes Returns in fine Linen, Lace, Cambricks, Thread, Tapes, Incle, Madder, Boards, Drugs, Whalebone, Train-oil, Toys, and many other Things. And the Balance is usually supposed to be much in Favour of England. 12. To Ireland, England sends almost all Kinds of Merchandize, (Linen and Woollen Stuffs and Provisions alone excepted;) and, doubtless, reaps great Advantages thereby. Although, of late Years, Ireland's great and increasing Importations of Linen into England may, in Time, turn the Balance against England, notwithstanding the great Sums of Money spent in England by Ireland's Absentees. — Ireland moreover enjoys the Benefit of a direct Commerce to most Parts of Europe, viz. with the Netherlands, France, Spain and Portugal, with her Hides, Tallow, salted Beef, Pork, and Butter. The Returns whereof help to pay to England what they have from thence.

13. But the most important and advantageous Commerce of England is that carried on to her own Colonies in America. There it is that England (and Scotland also since her Union with her) finds the vast and constantly increasing Vent of her Product and Manufactures of almost every Kind, both of her own and those of every other European Country. And from thence she returns with the various Productions of America; Tobacco, Sugars, Rice, Ginger, Indigo, Drugs, Logwood, and Money, which our own Colonies got from the sundry European Nations holding Colonies in America. 14 To the Coast of Guinea, England sends sundry Sorts of coarse Wollen and Linen, Iron, Pewter, Brass, and Hardware Manufactures, Lead-shot, Swords, Knives, Fire-arms, Gunpowder, Glass-Manufactures, &c. And, beside its drawing no Money out of the Kingdom, it supplies her American Colonies with Negro Slaves, amounting in Number to above 100,000 annually; and moreover brings home to England Gold-Dust, dying and other Drugs, Red-wood, Guinea-Grains, Ivory, &c. This Trade therefore is extremely profitable to England. 15. To Arabia, Persia, East India, and China, England sends much foreign Silver Coin and Bullion, and sundry English Manufactures of Woollen Goods, and of Lead, Iron and Brass; and brings Home from those remote Regions, Muslins and Cottons of many various Kinds, Callicoes, raw and wrought Silk, Chints; Teas, Porcellain, Gold-Dust, Coffee, Saltpetre, and many other Drugs, &c. And so great a Quantity of those various Merchandizes are re-exported to foreign European Nations, as more than abundantly compensates for all the Silver Bullion which England carries out! — Now, if (as some compute) England's annual Exports do amount to near seven Millions Sterling, and that her annual Imports do not exceed five Millions; of which five Millions above one Million is reexported, then may the general annual Balance in Favour of England be about or near three Millions Sterling; or, in other Words, so much is the annual Profit of England by its foreign Commerce.

In order for a Description of its several Parts, we shall begin with Cornwall: This County's Mountains supply an immense Quantity of excellent Tin, and also some Copper. — Its best Towns are: Falmouth, a pretty modern Town. It has a good Harbour, some foreign Commerce; and is finely situated for the Station of the Packet-boats to Spain and Portugal. — Penzance is a well-built and populous Sea-port Town, of considerable Commerce.

Devonshire has both Tin and Lead Mines, with Manufactures of the finest Serges or Perpetuanos, Kersies, Bonelace, and excellent Cyder. — Plymouth is a large Town, with a noble noble Harbour, a large Royal Dock for Ships of War, a Royal Citadel, and other Forts and Batteries; and with the Buildings and People, and its extenſive Dock, may probably contain about 20,000 People. — Exeter is a large, opulent, and ancient commercial City, containing about and ſome ſay more than 20,000 Inhabitants. It is eminent for its great Trade in fine Perpetuanos and Serges, to the Value (as commonly ſaid) of 600,000 l. per Annum, and has alſo a good foreign Commerce.

Dorſetſhire abounds in Corn, Cattle, Sheep, Hemp, Flax, and Timber; ſo pleaſant a County as to have been ſometimes ſtiled the Garden of England. — Bridport is chiefly noted for the great Quantities of Cordage and Match for the Navy. — Weymouth and Melcomb-Regis are two populous Sea-port Towns. They carry on a conſiderable foreign Commerce. Dorcheſter, the County-Town, is large, though an inland Town; and, for ſix Miles round it, the Country has been ſaid to feed 600,000 Sheep — Pool is a conſiderable Port for Shipping and Commerce, chiefly in the Newfoundland Fiſhery. Blandford, a well-built inland Town, ſurpaſſes all England in fine Lace, has ſome Woollen Manufactures, and is noted for good Malt. — Sherburn, a large Town, containing 1,300 Houſes and 10,000 Inhabitants. Its modern Manufactures are Buttons, Lace, and Haberdaſhery Wares, wherein it carries on a good Trade.

Somerſetſhire lies on the Briſtol Channel; it abounds in Corn, fine Cattle, Sheep, Lead, Copper, Woad for Dyers, and Briſtol Stones reſembling Diamonds. Its Manufactures are very important, conſiſting of fine Cloths, Serges, and Druggets: It is alſo famous for the beſt and largeſt Cheeſes, by ſome eſteemed equal to Parmezan Cheeſe, and alſo for Cyder. — Its beſt Town is, Taunton, a very large Town, on the River Tone, navigable from thence to Bridgewater. It contains about 20,000 Inhabitants, many of whom are wealthy, as this Place has very conſiderable Manufactures of Serges, Druggets, and other Woollen Stuffs.

The renowned commercial City of Briſtol is ſeparated by the River Avon, between the two Counties of Somerſet and Glouceſter; yet, being a County of itſelf, it is no Part of either of thoſe Counties. A conſiderable Part of it lies on the South Side of that River, and a ſtill larger Part on the North Side of it; having a Communication by three Stone-bridges alſo by a Draw-bridge for letting of Ships up into the Harbour, called the Back, or the little River ſtiled the Froom. It is by far the largeſt City in Britain, next after London; containing above 13,000 Houſes, and about 100,000 Inhabitants; both wich are conſtantly increaſing. It is ſaid by ſome to employ 2,000 maritime Veſſels of all Sizes, Coaſters, as well as Ships employed in foreign Voyages. It has many very important Manufactures: Its Glaſsbottle and Drinking-glaſs one alone occupying fifteen large Houſes. Its Braſs-wire Manufactures are alſo very conſiderable. It contains twenty-one Churches, beſide its Cathedral, and ſeven or eight Meeting-houſes; has a moſt extenſive Quay, with Dock-yards, &c. for Ship-building; ſundry good Hoſpitals, in all eighteen in Number, and many Almshouſes and other charitable Foundations. Inſomuch, that this City, for its prudent Regulations is perhaps out-done by none, and for its vaſt Commerce, Wealth, and Shipping, by very few trading Cities in all Europe.

Wiltſhire is a fertile County, greatly abounding in Woollen Manufactures, more eſpecially at the Towns of Chippenham, Malmſbury, Calne, Devizes, Marlborough, &c. — Saliſbury is a fine and well-built City, having a fine Town-houſe, a ſpacious Market-place, a noble Cathedral, and about 10,000 Inhabitants. Here are ſeveral flouriſhing Manufactures, particularly fine Flanels, Long-clothes, called Saliſbury Whites, for the Turkey Trade; alſo Druggets and Bonelace.

Hampſhire, on the Engliſh Channel, abounds in Corn, Wool, Iron, and Timber; but it has ſtill a conſiderable Trade in Wool-ſtapling. — Portſmouth is a regularly fortified and moſt famous Sea-port Town. It has a very ſpacious Harbour, in which a thouſand Ships may ride at Anchor, a moſt extenſive Dock-yard, for the Conſtruction and Repairs of the Royal Navy, fine Rope-yards, vaſt Storehouſes, a Cooperage, Victualing-office, Gunwharf, moſt convenient Houſes alſo for the numerous Officers and Maſter-Workmen: All which form a Kind of diſtinct Town. And the adjoining Streets on the Place called the Common form another conſiderable Town. Moreover, the Town of Goſport, intirely depending on Portſmouth, and lying on the South Side of the Harbour, forms alſo a conſiderable Town. So that the whole taken together may fairly be preſumed to contain at leaſt 20,000 People; above 1,000 Men being conſtantly kept in the King's Pay in and about the Harbour.

Berkſhire,

Berkſhire, a delightful and fruitful County. — Reading its County Town, on the Thames, is large and wealthy. It contains at leaſt about 8,000 People, and carries on a great Trade with London in Malt and Flour.

Surrey is a pleaſant County.—Guildford being its reputed County Town, ſtanding on the River Wey; which, being navigable from it to the Thames, ſerves to convey much Ship-Timber, &c. to London. Southwark, though uſually deemed a Part of the great Contiguity of London, or one of its great Suburbs, yet is within this County; and its Contiguity ſtretches along the Thames from Deptford-Brigde to Vauxhall, above ſix Miles in Length, though very narrow in ſome Parts, and at other Parts ſcarcely contiguous, containing very many opulent People, and many Thouſands of induſtrious Inhabitants, and various Manufacturers.

Suſſex, on the Engliſh Channel, oppoſite to France, is abundant in fine Oak Timber, and in Iron-mines, worked with very great Benefit. — Chicheſter City is its chief Town. Its principal Trade is in Corn for Exportation, and in Malt and Needles. Its Harbour is neither good nor large; though it has not much foreign Trade, it is nevertheleſs eſteemed a well-built City.

Kent, a noble and fertile County.—Canterbury, its ancient Capital, is a decayed City. Here are ſtill ſome Silk Manufactures carried on by the poſterity of the Walloons, and of the French Refugees. It has ſeveral fine Remains of ſtately eccleſiaſtical Buildings, with Part of its ancient Walls: Poſſibly there may be near 20,000 People ſtill left in it. Its Neighbourhood is noted for the beſt Brawn, and alſo for great Quantities of excellent Hops. Dover, an ancient and open Sea-port, oppoſite to that of Calais in France. Its Harbour is a dry one, and is only capable, at High-water, of receiving middling Merchant-Ships. Of its ancient ſeven Pariſh Churches two only remain. Here is a Cuſtom-houſe, and a Victualing-office for the Royal Navy; yet it is a Place of no conſiderable foreign Commerce. Its huge Caſtle ſtands too high to do much Execution againſt Shipping. Here are held the Courts relating to the Cinque Ports, it being the chief of them. In Time of Peace there goes from hence a Packet-Boat twice every Week to Calais, in Sight of it, with the Mails for France, &c. Chatham is the principal Dock-yard for the Royal Navy, being ſupplied with immenſe Quantities of all Kinds of Naval Stores, and whatever elſe may be requiſite for the Equipment of a Royal Fleet. It has an Ordnance-Office, a Victualing-Office, and an Hoſpital; — handſome and convenient Houſes for the ſeveral Officers. And the intire Oeconomy here is ſo much improved of late Years, that it may be pronounced truly admirable!

Middleſex is a ſmall but pleaſant and fertile Country. London, its auguſt and matchleſs Capital, is not to be deſcribed in leſs than a very conſiderable Folio Volume: Yet we may ſummarily obſerve, that it contains 128 Pariſh Churches, and near as many Proteſtant Diſſenting Meeting-houſes and Chapels, of various Denominations, beſide five Foreign Churches, or private Popiſh Chapels, and Jews Synagogues. It contains 3 Colleges, 13 Hoſpitals, and almoſt 100 Alms-houſes; 15 Colleges (called Inns) for Lawyers, 27 Squares, and 131 Charity-Schools. In point of Opulence, Commerce, Populouſneſs, and Extent, (including Weſtminſter and all its other Suburbs) we apprehend it may fairly be deemed the firſt City in Chriſtendom, if not on the whole Earth.

Eſſex abounds with the fineſt Manufactures of Bays, and with fine Saffron, and Oyſters. — Colcheſter, its chief Town, is an ancient, large, and populous Place, with a Harbour for ſmall Veſſels. It has long been eminent for its fine Manufactures of Bays and Serges, (in which Manufactures this ſingle Town has been ſaid formerly to have returned 1,500,000 l. annually) and for excellent barrelled Oyſters, ſent to many diſtant Parts.

Suffolk produces Hemp, and all Sorts of Grain and excellent Cattle. — Ipſwich, its Capital, is an ancient decayed Town, although it has ſtill twelve Pariſh Churches, a Harbour and Yard for Ship-building. It alſo retains ſtill ſome Woollen Manufactures.

Norfolk's Productions are Corn, Wool, Honey, and Saffron; and its chief Manufactures are fine Woollen, and Half-Silk Stuffs, and Stockings. — Norwich is its ancient, large, and populous Metropolis, the Center of all the Manufactures and inland Commerce of this County. To the Flemings and Walloons, who fled hither from the Perſecution of the Duke d'Alva, and were encouraged to ſettle here by Queen Elizabeth, are owing the principal and vaſt Increaſe of its fine Crapes and other light Manufactures, which are ſaid to employ 120,000 Perſons in and near this City; and Norwich buys up Quantities of fine Yarn, which is ſpun in ſundry other more Northern Counties. This City is of great Service to Yarmouth, its proper Sea-port, not only for exporting its excellent Stuff, &c. Manufactures, beyond Sea and to London, but likewiſe by the vaſt Quantities of Wine, Oil, Coals, Fiſh, and other heavy Goods, which ſo populous a manufacturing City as Norwich conſtantly conſumes. The perſecuted Flemings, driven out by d'Alva's Cruelty, firſt taught Norwich to make Says, Bays, Serges, Shalloons, and other fine Stuffs; and they afterward ſell into the Manufactures of Camlets, Crapes, Druggets, &c. in which they are ſaid to return 200,000 l annually, and their Stocking Manufactures are ſaid to be valued annually at 60,000 l. more. — Yarmouth is a handſome and populous Town, with a good Harbour, and one of the fineſt Quays in all Europe. Its Herring Fiſhery is very great, employing 150 Veſſels therein, whereof about 50 are uſually laden to Genoa, Leghorn, Naples, Meſſina, Portugal, Spain, and Venice; from hence alſo are exported all Kinds off Stuffs made at Norwich, and other Parts, to Holland, &c. — Yarmouth imports from Norway, and the Ports of the Baltic, Pitch, Tar, Timber, Hemp, Flax, Iron, &c. and, ſince the Decline of Ipſwich, it has been the principal Rendevouz of the Newcaſtle Colliers and other Shipping, paſſing between the North and South Parts. It alſo deals conſiderably in Coals and Malt. It was formerly reckoned to have 1,100 Ships of its own. Lynn, a wealthy and populous Sea-port Town, with conſiderable Shipping and Commerce.

to

Cambridgeſhire is chiefly noted for very good Paſturage, Corn, and Saffron.

Huntingdonſhire is partly marſhy, though with fine Paſturage, Corn and Cattle. Its fenny Situation, like Part of Cambridgeſhire, affords gread Plenty of fine freſh-water Fiſh and Wild-fowl.

Bedfordſhire is an in-land County, fertile in Grain and Cattle. — Bedford, its Shire-Town, on the Ouſe, is a large, populous, and well-built Town. It has a great Trade in Corn ſent down the Ouſe to Holland by the Shipping of Lynn. Other Materials for Commerce formerly were Womens Straw-hats. Here is alſo good Fuller's Earth, ſo neceſſary for the Woollen Manufacture.

Hertfordſhire is in general a fertile inland Country, plentiful in Corn and Cattle.

Buckinghamſhire has Plenty of Cattle and Sheep; and has good Bone-lace and Paper Manufactures.

Oxfordſhire is a fine and fertile County. — Oxford City, having an illuſtrious Univerſity, is large and well built, but, in a great Meaſure, diſtitute both of Commerce and Manufactures. Woodſtock, a ſmall Market-Town, is only noted for a Manufacture of Watch-Chains and other Steel Wares, as alſo for Gloves and other Leather Manufactures; and Bampton, for the greateſt Trade in Skins of any Part of the Kingdom.

Glouceſterſhire is a fine and fruitful County, eminent for the fineſt of Wool. In its Plains there is Plenty of Corn and Timber; and it produces vaſt Quantities of Cheeſe and excellent Cyder. — Glouceſter City ſtands on the Severn. Although the City of Briſtol always has, and probably ever will, intercept and prevent its being conſiderable for naval Commerce, it has however a Cuſtom-houſe, to which Ships of a moderate Burden come up; its beſt Manufactures are Pins and Bellfounding.

Monmouthſhire, on the other or weſt Side of the Severn Frith, or Sea, is mountainous and woody, yet not unfertile. — Monmouth, its Shire-Town, having a Harbour, and carrying on a good Trade with Briſtol. Pontypoole is noted for its Iron Slitting-mills, its Manufacture of Iron Snuff-boxes, &c. And more lately for its fine Manufacture of Tinned Iron Plates, ſo much improved, and ſo univerſally in uſe for Kitchen-Furniture, and many other Purpoſes.

Herefordſhire abounds in Corn, excellent Wool, Timber, Cyder and Salmon.

Worceſterſhire abounds in Corn, Cattle, Sheep, Fruits, River-Fiſh, and in divers Salt-Springs und Salt-Pits at ſundry of its Towns. Its beſt Towns are: Worceſter City, ſtanding pleaſantly on the River Severn, may contain about or near 20,000 Inhabitants. It has divers Manufactures of fine Cloths, and of Gloves. Here is a Cuſtom-houſe and Quay, to which many Veſſels of ſmall Burden come up. Bewdley is a good Town, on the Severn, dealing largely in Corn; Iron Wares, Salt, Hops, Leather, Manchester Goods, &c. carried down the Severn to Glouceſter and other Parts.

Warwickſhire is a good in-land County. — Birmingham is the largeſt Town in this County, moſt populous and moſt thriving. It is not only all over England, but it may be ſaid likewiſe all over Europe, that it is eminent for its almoſt endleſs Variety of excellent and ingenious Hardware Manufactures; of vaſt Variety of Snuff and Tobacco Boxes, Buttons, Shoe-Buckles, Tweezers, &c. with many other Sorts of Steel and Braſs Wares. For which End it is ſupplied with very cheap Coals, Coals, and all other Neceſſaries in great Plenty. It has three fine Churches, ſeveral Diſſenting Meeting-houſes; and, having lately had many new Streets added to it, it may probably contain about 30,000 Inhabitants; and is at preſent much more likely to increaſe than to diminiſh.

Northhamptorſhire is a very populous inland County, extremely fruitful. — Northhampton Town is a pleaſant Place, where is the greateſt Horſe-Market in England.

Rutlandſhire is the very ſmalleſt County in England, remarkably abounding in Corn, black Cattle, and Sheep.

Leiceſterſhire is very fertile in Corn, Cattle, and Sheep with fine long Wool. — Leiceſter, its Shire-Town, is conſiderably large and populous. It carries on a great Trade in Stockings, Corn, and Cattle. The Stocking-frame Trade having in ſome Years yielded 60,000 l. per Annum.

Lincolnſhire, a large County, with a very various Soil.

Nottinghampſhire is a fine County, and has in it many Woods, Foreſts, and Coal-pits. — Nottingham, ſituated on a Rock near the River Trent, is one of the fineſt and pleaſanteſt Towns of the whole Kingdom. It is wealthy and populous. Its principal Manufactures are Stockings, for which it is very famous; it has good Eearthen-ware; and is alſo very famous for its excellent Malt and Ale.

Derbyſhire, though (like moſt other Counties) it has a various Soil, has however Plenty of Corn and Wood, with many Mines of Iron, Lead, Coal, and Marble. — Derby, its Shire-Town, is a Staple for Wool, and is noted for good Malt and fine Ale, the latter being exported in gread Quantities.

Staffordſhire is in ſome Parts barren, mountainous, and woody; in other Parts it has good Corn and Paſture; and particularly abounds in Mines of Iron and Coal. — Woolverhampton is a wealthy and populous Town, filled with Manufactures of the fineſt Locksmiths Work in England, and other Kinds of Hardware.

Shropſhire (or the County of Salop) is a pleaſant and fertile Country, abounding in Corn, Coals, Iron, and Wood. — Shrewſbury (or Salop) is a pleaſant, and well-built Town. It has large Manufactures of Flannel, called here Welch Cottons, und alſo of Cloth.

Cheſhire is moſtly a level Country, abounding in Corn and Cattle of all kinds, and in Salt-Works. — Cheſter City drives a very conſiderable Trade with Ireland. This City is large and populous. It is computed annually to vend 30,000 Tons Weight Weight of its excellent Cheese, each consisting of 20 Hundred Weight.

Yorkshire, by far the largest County in England, is, in general, extremely fertile and plentiful in all the Necessaries of Life. Out of its forty-nine Towns, the following ones are the principal, viz. York City is very much decayed, and fallen from its ancient Splendor and Magnitude. Halifax, upon the River Calder, is a very populous and very wealthy Town, eminent for its extensive Woollen Manufactures. Leeds is a very populous, large, and wealthy Town, having three Churches, and several dissenting Meeting-houses. It is most famous for its immense Woollen-Cloth fair, where, say some, 20,000 l. worth of Cloth is often sold in an Hour's Time, and much of it shipped off at Hull for foreign Parts, its River being navigable by Boats to Wakefield, York, and Hull. Wakefield's Woollen Manufactures have of late so much increased it, as to be computed more populous than York City. Sheffield is a very large Town, eminently famous, for its Cutlery Ware; in which it is said to employ 40,000 People, though not all living within the Town. — Hull, enjoys a very large foreign Commerce, and a numerous Shipping, more especially employed to the Baltic, and to the Northern Kingdoms, for Naval Stores, &c. and also in the Fisheries to Iceland and Greenland. It has a large inland Trade with sundry neighbouring Counties, by means of the several Rivers at and near it. Hull also deals largely in Corn, has much Sail-Cloth manufactured at its Trinity-house, and Lead. Its Customs, by its foreing Trade, are reputed to amount to from 30 to 40,000 l. It may probably contain near 20,000 Inhabitants. Scarborough is a good Seaport Town, with a safe Harbour. It is employed so much in the fishing for Cod, Herrings, &c. as to be able, not only to supply the neighbouring Countries, but also to send considerable Quantities beyond Sea. It likewise deals largely in the Coal-Trade.

In the County or Bishopric of Durham, the principal Commodities or Productions are, Iron, Lead, and Coals, and some Linen Manufactures at Darligton.

Northumberland yields excellent Mines of Coals and Lead. — Newcastle, on the North Side of the River Tine, is its stately and opulent Capital. This Town is extremely populous. The River Tine is its extensive and safe Harbour; from whence almost incredible Quantities of Coals are constantly shipped off for London, and other Parts of England, as well as to foreign Parts.

Parts. It its, moreover, in other Reſpects, a Place of very conſiderable foreign Commerce; has ſeveral Glaſs-houſes, a conſiderable Manufacture of Hardware, and the beſt Grindſtones in all Europe. Newcaſtle builds many Ships for the Coal-trade. Seven Miles down the River, the large Village of North-Shields is the noted Station for the Coal-Ships, where they take in their Ladings from the numerous Lighters called Keels, conſtantly going thither for that End, navigated by above 4000 Keelmen. Merchant-Ships of conſiderable Burden come up to its fine Quay, but moſt of them remain at Shields, ready to go out to Sea; where, at the Mouth of the Tine, there is a Fort well planted with Cannon, and a Garriſon. Newcaſtle, with Shields, is by many thought to contain above 30,000 People.

Lancaſhire is in ſome Parts fruitful, in other Parts marſhy, and in ſome other Parts ſtony and barren. Its chief natural Productions are Corn, Coals, and excellent Hemp.—Lancaſter, its County-Town, is a Sea port, though capable only of Ships of about 70 Tons Burden: Yet, with ſuch Ships, it carries on a thriving Trade with our American Colonies, in Manufactures of Woollen, Hardware, &c. Mancheſter, is a large, beautiful, and extremely populous Place: And though, in Point of Government, it is really but a Village, as having no higher Magiſtrate than a Conſtable; yet, in Magnitude, elegant Buildings, and Number of Inhabitants, it ſurpaſſes all the Town, and even all the Cities of England, three only excepted. It is eminently famous for the Skill and Induſtry of its People, in many Kinds of Manufactures of Cotton, Dimities, Tickings, &c. and is by ſome ſaid to contain upwards of 30,000, and ſome others think 40,000 People. Liverpool is a large and fine Sea-port Town, at the Mouth of the River Merſee, with a convenient Harbour, and a fine wet Dock. It has ſo vaſt a foreign or naval Commerce, more particularly in the Guinea and Weſt-India Trade, as even to vie with, and in ſome Branches to exceed the City of Briſtol itſelf. It may have about 300 Ships and Veſſels, great and ſmall, belonging to it, including coaſting as well as foreign Trade; is thought to contain about 30,000 Inhabitants; and both it and Mancheſter are conſtantly increaſing, not only in ſingle Houſes, but even in intire new Streets.

Weſtmoreland lies moſtly in a marſhy or mooriſh Country, and other Parts of it are mountainous.—Kendal is conſiderable Place in point of Trade, Buildings, and the Number and Wealth Wealth of its Inhabitants, and is alſo greatly enriched by its Woollen Cloth Manufactures, and by its Druggets, Stockings, and Hats, although it has but a ſmall Harbour on the River Can.

Cumberland, on the Iriſh Sea, abounds in Pit-coal, Copper, and Lead.

In the Principality of WALES are twelve Counties, viz. ſix in South-Wales, and the like Number in North-Wales. The whole country is ſo vaſtly improved ſince its complete Union with England, as to have quite another Appearance at preſent than 200 Years ago. Its Lands well cultivad, its Towns well built and inhabited; and, although it be moſtly mountainous, it nevertheleſs affords Plenty of all the Neceſſaries of Life, either in reſpect to Corn or Cattle: It has alſo Plenty of Wood, Coals, and Turf for Fewel, and for working its Mines. The whole Principality probably containing 300,000 People. — The Town of Pembroke has a conſiderable naval Commerce. Caermarthen is a thriving, well-built, polite, and populous Place, with a good Trade. Cardigan Town is reaſonably large and well built, has a very briſk Trade with Ireland from its River Tivy. And here they are ſaid to catch the fineſt Salmon in all England. Wrexham is the largeſt Town in Northwales, being populous and well built; and has a good Trade in Flannels.

SCOTLAND.

Its natural Productions are Corn and Pulſe of all Kinds, horned Cattle, ſmall hardy Horſes, Sheep, Hogs, Wool, Flax, Iron, Lead, Marble, Peltry, Slate, and Hemp. It is uſually divided into thirty-one Shires and two Stewartries, and may contain 1,500,000 People. Its beſt Towns are: Dunbar, a well-built Royal Burgh, and a well-known Sea-port, with a good Harbour, and ſome conſiderable naval Commerce. Edinburgh, the Capital of Scotland. It is large, well built, and populous, having an eminent Univerſity, an Exchange, a noble and ſtrong Caſtle, with a Garriſon, a fine Royal Palace, and many handſome Palaces of the Nobility. The ſpacious Town and Port of Leith, containing two Pariſh-Churches, with a fine Quay and Pier running a great Way into the Sea, is the proper Port of Edinburgh; which has no inconſiderable foreing Trade, and large coaſting Trade; and with Leith, and its other Suburbs, may fairly contain 60,000 People.

Edinburgh

Edinburgh is, moreover, the Seat of Government, of the chief Courts of Law, and Boards of Revenue; and has may Persons of Quality and Figure always residing in it.

Borrowstonness, on the River Forth, is a Port of good Commerce and Shipping; and, next to Leith, carries on the greatest Trade to Holland and France of any in Scotland. — Dumfries is a large improving Sea-port, on the Irish Sea; has a considerable Number of good Ships, with a proportionable Share of foreign Commerce, and about 6000 Inhabitants. — Port-Patrick, a small Town, with a tolerable Harbour, being the usual Port of Passage to Belfast, and other Parts of the North of Ireland. — Greenock, a wellbuilt Sea-port, with a good Share of foreign Trade, and the largest Herring-Fishery of any on the West Coast of Scotland.

Glasgow is a large and beautifully built City, situated in a Plain along the River Clyde, in a very fertile Country. It is a City of very considerable foreign as well as domestic Commerce, having many good Ships trading to our American Colonies, and to many other Countries. It has many excellent Manufactures of various Kinds. Its proper Harbour lies some Miles lower down the River, at a Place named Newport-Glasgow; yet smaller Vessels can come up to the City, and the City may possibly contain near 30,000 Inhabitants. — Stirling is a large and well-built Town; Ships of small Burden come up with the Tide to its Bride. It has very considerable Manufactures of Shalloons and Serges. Kirkaldy is the most populous and thriving Burgh on all the Coast of Fife, having a considerable foreing Commerce, and much Shipping. Dundee, is a large and populous Town, near the Mouth of the River Tay: It is a Town of considerable Trade, exporting much Linen, Grain, Herrings, Peltry, &c. to sundry foreign Parts: It may contain about 10,000 Inhabitants. New Aberdeen, at the Mouth of the River Dee, is a large well-built City, and has a good dry or Tide-Harbour: a considerable Degree of foreign Commerce, and much Shipping, and above 12,000 Inhabitants. Old-Meldrum has good Wollen Manufactures, and a very great Trade in Wool and Linen. — From the Isle of Skye is carried on a very great Herring-Fishing, and also from some neighbouring Isles.

IRELAND.

IRELAND.

The Kingdom of Ireland is a fine and fertile Iſland, abounding in all the Neceſſaries and Conveniencies that a reaſonable Man can wiſh for, Wine only excepted. In it are to be found ſundry large and opulent Cities, a great Number of handſome and well-traded Towns, and many valuable Materials for Commerce — Dublin, its ſuperb Capital, and the famous Metropolis of the whole Kingdom. Of this City it has been very frequently and confidently aſſerted, that, ſince the Year 1711, or, as others, three Years later, or ſince the Acceſſion to the Crown of the illuſtrious Houſe of Hanover, it has ſo rapidly increaſed, as, in ſo ſhort a Space, to have added to her Suburbs no fewer than 4000 Houſes, and 30,000 Inhabitants. It ſtands in ſo good a Country as enables it to export many Materials for Commerce, and particularly great Quantities of Salt Proviſions, Hides, Tallow, Butter, and Cheeſe, but principally of late Years an almoſt incredible Quantity of Linen of various Sorts, to the great enriching of Ireland. Dublin, therefore, with all ſuch Advantages, cannot fail to have a great Commerce, and a numerous Shipping; and may probably contain about 100,000 Inhabitants; much about the Size of Stockholm, Copenhagen, Berlin, Marſeilles, and our own Briſtol. — Donnegal is a Place of ſome Trade; as is likewiſe Enniſkilling. All which Places, and many more, (tho' leſs conſiderable ones) are chiefly, and moſt induſtriouſly, employed in the Manufactures of Linen and Linen Thread, to the great Benefit of the whole Kingdom, which, by its vaſt annual Exportations of Linen into England, is enabled to pay for the great annual Importations from England into Ireland.

Cork, by far the nobleſt City next to Dublin; whether conſidered in reſpect to Magnitude, Riches, Commerce or Shipping; every one of which are truly great. More eſpecially its Commerce to our American Plantations is exceeding great, for Salt Proviſions of all Kinds, but Fiſh. — Limerick is a handſome, populous, well-traded and ſtrong City, on both Sides the Shannon, a Place, of good Commerce and Shipping. Kingſale is a populous and ſtrong Town, with an excellent Harbour and conſiderable Commerce and Shipping: And it is moreover, occaſionally a Station for the Navy-Royal; for which End there reſide at this Port proper naval Officers, Storehouſes &c.

DIALOGUES

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0048
DFG

DIALOGUES OF THE DEAD.

DIALOGUE I. *)

Louis le Grand — Peter the Great.

Louis.

Who, Sir, could have thought, when you were learning the Trade of a ſhipwright in the Dock-yards of England and Holland, that you would ever acquire, as I had done, the ſurname of Great.

Peter.

Which of us beſt deſerved that Title, Poſterity will decide. But my Greatneſs appeared ſufficiently in that very Act which ſeemed to you a Debaſement.

Louis.

The Dignity of a King does not ſtoop to ſuch mean Employments. For my own part, I was careful never to appear to the Eyes of my Subjects or Foreigners, but in all the Splendor and Majeſty of Royal Power.

Peter.

Had I remained on the Throne of Ruſſia, as my Anceſtors did, environed with all the pomp of barbarous Greatneſs, I ſhould have been idolized by my People, as much, at leaſt, as you ever were by the French. My Deſpotiſm was more abſolute, their ſervitude was more humble. But then I could not have reformed their evil Cuſtoms; have taught them Arts, Civility, Navigation, and War; have exalted them from Brutes in human ſhapes into Men. In this was ſeen the extraordinary Force of my Genius beyond any Compariſon with all other Kings, that I thought it no Degradation, or Diminution of my Greatneſs, to deſcend from my Throne, and go and work in the Dock-yards of a foreign Republic; to ſerve as a private ſailor in my own Fleets, and as a common ſoldier in my own Army; till I had raiſed myſelf by my *) Littleton's Dialogues of the Dead. London 1765. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0049
DFG

Merit in all the ſeveral ſteps and degrees of Promotion, up to the higheſt Command, and had thus induced my nobility to ſubmit to a regular ſubordination in the Sea- and Land-ſervice, by a leſſon hard to their pride, and which they would not have learnt from any other Maſter, or by any other method of inſtruction.

LOUIS.

I am forced to acknowledge, that it was a great Act. When I thought it a mean one, my judgement was perverted by the Prejudices ariſing from my own education, and the Redicule thrown upon it by ſome of my Courtiers, whoſe minds were too narrow to be able to comprehend the Greatneſs of your's in that ſituation.

PETER.

It was an Act of more Heroiſm than any ever done by Alexander or Cæſar. Nor would I conſent to exchange my Glory with their's. They both did great Things: but they were at the head of great Nations, far ſuperior in valour and military ſkill to thoſe with whom they contended. I was the King of an ignorant, undiſciplined, barbarous People. My Enemies were at firſt ſo ſuperior to my Subjects, that ten thouſand of them could beat a hundred thouſand Roſſians. They had formidable navies: I had not a ſhip. The King of Sweden was a Prince of the moſt intrepid Courage, aſſiſted by Generals of conſummate Knowledge in War, and ſerved by ſoldiers ſo diſciplined, that they were become the Admiration and Terror of Europe Yet I vanquiſhed theſe ſoldiers; I drove that Prince to take refuge in Turkey; I won battles at Sea, as well as Land; I new-created my People; I gave them Arts, Sciences, Policy; I enabled them to keep all the Powers of the North in Awe and Dependance, to give Kings to Poland, to check and intimidate the Ottoman Emperors, to mix with great Weight in the Affairs of all Europe. What other Man has ever done ſuch Wonders as theſe? Read all the Records of ancient and modern times, and find, if you can, one fit to be put in compariſon with me!

LOUIS.

Your Glory would indeed have been ſupreme and unequaled, if, in civilizing your ſubjects, you had reformed the Brutality of your own Manners, and the barbarous Vices of your Nature. But, alas! the Legiſlator and Reformer of the Muſcovites was drunken and cruel.

PETER.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0050
DFG

PETER.

My Drunkenneſs I confeſs: nor will I plead, to excuſe it, the Example of Alexander. It inflamed the tempers of both, which were by nature too fiery, into furious paſſions of Anger, and produced Actions, of which our Reaſon, when ſober, was aſhamed. But the Cruelty you upbraid me with, may in ſome degree be excuſed, as neceſſary to the work I had to perform. Fear of Puniſhment was in the hearts of my barbarous Subjects the only Principle of Obedience. To make them reſpect the Royal Authority, I was obliged to arm it with all the Terrors of Rage. You had a more pliant People to govern, a People whoſe minds could be ruled, like a fine managed Horſe, with an eaſy and gentle Rein. The fear of Shame did more with them, than the fear of the Knout could do with the Ruſſians. The Humanity of your Character and the Ferocity of mine were equally ſuitable to the Nations over which we reigned. But what excuſe can you find for the cruel violence you employed againſt your Proteſtant Subjects? They deſired nothing but to live under the protection of Laws you yourſelf had confirmed; and they repaid that Protection by the moſt hearty Zeal for your ſervice. Yet theſe did you force, by the moſt inhuman ſeverities, either to quit the Religion in which they were bred, and which their conſciences ſtill retained, or to leave their native Land, and endure all the Woes of a perpetual Exile. If the rules of Policy could not hinder you from thus depopulating your kingdom, and transferring to foreign countries its manufactures and commerce, I am ſurpriſed that your heart itſelf did not ſtop you. It makes one ſhudder to think, that ſuch orders ſhould be ſent from the moſt poliſhed Court in Europe, as the moſt ſavage Tartars could hardly have excuted without Remorſe and Compaſſion.

LOUIS.

It was not my heart, but my Religion, that dictated theſe ſeverities. My Confeſſor told me, they alone would atone for all my ſins.

PETER.

Had I believed in my Patriarch, as you believed in your Prieſt, I ſhould not have been the great Monarch that I was.— But I mean not to detract from the Merit of a Prince whoſe memory is dear to his Subjects. They are proud of having obeyed you, which is certainly the higheſt praiſe to a King. My people alſo date their glory from the Æra of my Reign.

But there is this capital Diſtinction between us. The Pomp and Pageantry of ſtate were neceſſary to your Greatneſs: I was great in myſelf, great in the Energy and Powers of my Mind, great in the ſuperiority and ſovereignty of my Soul over all other Men.

DIALOGUE II.

MERCURY — An Engliſh DUELLIST — A North-American SAVAGE.

The DUELLIST.

Mercury, Charon's Boat is on the other ſide of the Water. Allow me, before it returns, to have ſome converſation with the North-American Savage, whom you brought hither with me. I never before ſaw one of that Species. He looks very grim. — Pray, Sir, what is your Name? I underſtand you ſpeak Engliſh.

SAVAGE.

Yes, I learnt it in my Childhood, having been bred for ſome years among the Engliſh of New York. But, before I was a Man, I returned to my valiant Countrymen, the Mohawks; and having been villainouſly cheated by one of yours in the ſale of ſome Rum, I never cared to have any thing to do with them afterwards. Yet I took up the Hatchet for them with the reſt of my Tribe in the late War againſt France, and was killed while I was out upon a Scalping Party. But I died very well ſatisfied: for my Brethren were victorious; and, before I was ſhot, I had glorioufly ſcalped ſeven Men, and five Women and Children. In a former War I had performed ſtill greater Exploits. My Name is the bloody Bear: it was given me to expreſs my Fierceneſs and Valour.

DUELLIST.

Bloody Bear, I reſpect you, and am much your humble Servant. My Name is Tom Puſhwell, very well known at Arthur's. I am a Gentleman by my Birth, and by Profeſſion a Gameſter and Man of Honour. I have killed Men in fair Fighting, in honourable ſingle combat, but don't underſtand cutting the Throats of Women and Children.

SAVAGE.

Sir, that is our way of making War. Every Nation has its Cuſtoms. But, by the Grimneſs of your Countenance, and that that Hole in your Breaſt, I preſume you were killed, as I was, in ſome ſcalping Party. How happened it that your Enemy dit not take off your Scalp?

DUELLIST.

Sir, I was killed in a Duel. A Friend of mine had lent me a ſum of Money. After two or three years, being in great Want himſelf, he aſked me to pay him. I thought his Demand, which was ſomewhat peremptory, an Affront to my Honour, and ſent him a Challenge. We met in Hide-Park. The Fellow could not fence: I was abſolutely the adroiteſt Swordſman in England. So I gave him three or four Wounds; but at laſt he run upon me with ſuch Impetuoſity, that he put me out of my Play, and I could not prevent him from whipping me through the Lungs. I died the next day, as a Man of Honour ſhould, without any ſniveling Signs of Contrition or Repentance: and he will follow me ſoon; for his Surgeon has declared his Wounds to be mortal. It is ſaid, that his Wife is dead of Grief, and that his Family of ſeven Children will be undone by his Death. So I am well revenged, and that is a Comfort. For my Part, I had no Wife. — I always hated Marriage: my Miſtreſs will take good care of herſelf, and my Children are provided for at the Foundling-Hoſpital.

SAVAGE.

Mercury, I won't go in a Boat with that Fellow. He has murdered his Countryman: he has murdered his Friend: I ſay poſitively, I won't go in a Boat with that Fellow. I will ſwim over the River: I can ſwim like a Duck.

MERCURY.

Swim over the Styx! it muſt not be done; it is againſt the Laws of Pluto's Empire. You muſt go in the Boat, and be quiet.

SAVAGE.

Don't tell me of Laws: I am a Savage: I value no Laws. Talk of Laws to the Engliſhman: there are Laws in his Country, and yet you ſee he did not regard them. For they could never allow him to kill his Fellow-ſubject, in time of Peace, becauſe he aſked him to pay a Debt. I know indeed, that the Engliſh are a barbarous Nation; but they can't poſſibly be ſo brutal as to make ſuch things lawful.

MERCURY.

You reaſon well againſt Him. But how comes is that you are ſo offended with Murder; you, who have frequently massacred Women in their Sleep, and Children in the Cradle?

SAVAGE.

I killed none but my Enemies: I never killed my own Countrymen: I never killed my Friend: — Here, take my Blanket, and let it come over in the Boat; but see that the Murderer does not sit upon it, or touch it. If he does, I will burn it instantly in the Fire I see yonder. Farewell. — I am determined to swim over the Water.

MERCURY.

By this touch of my Wand I deprive thee of all thy Strength. — Swim now if thou canst.

SAVAGE.

This is a potent Enchanter. — Restore me my Strength, and I promise to obey thee.

MERCURY.

I restore it; but be orderly, and do as I bid you: Otherwise worse will befall you.

DUELLIST.

Mercury, leave him to me. I'll tutor him for you. Sirrah Savage, dost thou pretend to be ashamed of my company? Dost thou know that I have kept the best company in England?

SAVAGE.

I know thout art a Scoundrel. — Not pay thy Debts! kill thy Friend who lent thee Money for asking thee for it! Get out of my sight. I will drive thee into the Styx.

MERCURY.

Stop. — I command the. No Violence. — Talk to him calmly.

SAVAGE.

I must obey thee. — Well, Sir, let me know what Merit you had, to introduce you into good company? What could you do?

DUELLIST.

Sir, I gamed, as I told you. — Besides, I kept a good table. — I eat as well as any Man either in England or France.

SAVAGE.

Eat! did you ever eat the liver of a Frenchman, or his Leg, or his Shoulder! There is fine Eating! I have eat twenty.— My table was always well served. My Wife was esteemed the best Cook for the dressing of Man's Flesh in all North-America.

America. You will not pretend to compare your Eating with mine?

DUELLIST.

I danced very finely.

SAVAGE.

I'll dance with thee for thy Ears. — I can dance all day long. I can dance the War-Dance with more Spirit than any Man of my Nation. Let us see thee begin it. How thou standest like a Post! Has Mercury struck thee with his enfeebling Rod? Or art thou ashamed to let us see how awkward thou art? If he would permit me, I would teach thee to dance in a way that thou hast never yet learnt. But what else canst thou do, thou bragging Rascal?

DUELLIST.

O Heavens! must I bear this! What can I do with this Fellow? I have neither Sword, nor Pistol. And his shade seems to be twice as strong as mine.

MERCURY.

You must answer his Questions. It was your own Desire to have a conversation with him. He is not well bred: but he will tell you some truths which you must necessarily hear, when you come before Rhadamanthus He asked you what you could do besides Eating and Dancing.

DUELLIST.

I sung very agreably.

SAVAGE.

Let me hear you sing your Death Song, or the War Whoop. I challenge you to sing. — Come, begin. — The Fellow is mute. — Mercury, this is a Liar. — He has told us nothing but Lies. Let me pull out his tongue.

DUELLIST.

The Lie given me! — and alas! I dare not resent it. What an indelible Disgrace to the family of the Pushwells! This indeed is Damnation.

MERCURY.

Here, Charon, take these two Savages to your Care. How far the Barbarism of the Mohawk will excuse his horrid Acts, I leave Minos to judge. But what can be said for the other, for the Englishman? The Custom of Duelling? A bad Excuse at the best! but here it cannot avail. The Spirit that urged him to draw his Sword against his Friend is not that of Honour; it is the Spirit of the Furies, and to them he must go.

SAVAGE.

If he is to be punished for his wickedness turn him over to me. I perfectly understand the Art of tormenting. Sirrah, I begin my Work with this kick on your Breech.

DUELLIST.

Oh my Honour, my Honour, to what Infamy art thou fallen!

DIALOGUE III.

ALEXANDER THE GREAT.
CHARLES the Twelfth, King of Sweden.

ALEXANDER.

Your Majesty seems in great Wrath! Who has offended you?

CHARLES.

The Offence is to you as much as me. Here is a Fellow admitted into Elysium, who has affronted us both: an English Poet, one Pope. He has called us two Madmen!

ALEXANDER.

I have been unlucky in Poets. No Prince ever was fonder of the Muses than I, or has received from them a more ungrateful Return! When I was alive, I declareed that I envied Achilles, because he had a Homer to celebrate his Exploits; and I most bountifully rewarded Chœrilus, a Pretender to Poetry, for writing Verses on mine: but my Liberality, instead of doing me Honour, has since drawn upon me the Ridicule of Horace, a witty Roman Poet, and Lucan, another Versifier of the same nation, has loaded my Memory with the harshest Invectives.

CHARLES.

I know nothing of these; but I know that in my time, a pert French Satirist, one Boileau, made so free with your character, that I tore his book for having abused my favourite Hero. And now this saucy Englishman has libelled us both. — But I have a Proposal to make to you for the Reparation of our Honour. If you will join with me, we will turn all these insolent Scriblers out of Elysium, and throw them down headlong to the bottom of Tartarus, in spite of Pluto and all his Guards.

ALEXAN-

ALEXANDER.

This is juſt ſuch a Scheme as that you formed at Bender, to maintain yourſelf there, with the aid of three hundred Swedes, againſt the whole Force of the Ottoman Empire. And I muſt ſay, that ſuch Follies gave the Engliſh Poet too much cauſe to call you a Madman.

CHARLES.

If my Heroiſm was Madneſs, your's, I preſume, was not Wiſdom.

ALEXANDER.

There was a vaſt difference between your Conduct and mine. Let Poets or Declaimers ſay what they will, Hiſtory ſhews, that I was not only the braveſt Soldier, but one of the ableſs Commanders the World has ever ſeen. Whereas you, by imprudently leading your Army into vaſt and barren Deſerts, at the approach of the Winter, expoſed it to periſh in its march for want of Subſiſtence, loſt your Artillery, loſt a great number of your Soldiers, and were forced to fight with the Muſcovites under ſuch diſadvantages, as made it almoſt impoſſible for you to conquer.

CHARLES.

I will not diſpute your Superiority as a General. It is not for me, a mere Mortal, to contend with the Son of Jupiter Ammon.

ALEXANDER.

I ſuppoſe you think my pretending that Jupiter was my Father, as much entitles me to the name of a Madman, as your extravagant behaviour ad Bender does you. But you are greatly miſtaken. It was not my Vanity, but my Policy, which ſet up that Pretenſion. When I propoſed to undertake the conqueſt of Aſia, it was neceſſary for me to appear to the People ſomething more than a Man. They had been uſed to the Idea of Demi-god Heroes. I therefore claimed an equal Deſcent with Oſiris and Seſoſtris, with Bacchus and Hercules, the former Conquerors of the Eaſt. The Opinion of my Divinity aſſiſted my Arms, and ſubdued all Nations before me, from the Granicus to the Ganges. But, though I called myſelf the Son of Jupiter, and kept up the Veneration that name inſpired, by a Courage which ſeemed more than human, and by the ſublime Magnanimity of all my Behaviour, I dit not forget that I was the Son of Philip. I uſed the Policy of my Father, and the wiſe Leſſons of Ariſtotle, whom he had made my Preceptor, in the Conduct of all my great Designs. It was the Son of Philip who planted Greek Colonies in Asia, as far as the Indies; who formed Projects of Trade more extensive than his Empire itself; who laid the foundations of them in the midst of his Wars; who built Alexandria, to be the Centre and Staple of Commerce between Europe, Asia, and Africk; who send Nearchus to navigate the unknown Indian Seas, and intended to have gone himself from those Seas to the Pillars of Hercules, that is, to have explored the Passage round Africk, the Discovery of which has since been so glorious to Vasco de Gama. It was the Son of Philip, who, after subduing the Persians, governed them with such Lenity, such Justice and such Wisdom, that they loved him even more than ever they had loved their natural Kings; and who, by Intermarriages, and all Methods that could best establish a Coalition between the Conquerors and the Conquered, united them into one People. But what, Sir, did you do, to advance the Trade of your Subjects, to procure any Benefit to those you hat vanquished, or to convert any Enemy into a Friend?

CHARLES.

When I might easily have made myself King of Poland, and was advised to do so, by Count Piper, my favourite Minister, I generously gave that Kingdom to Stanislas, as you had given a great part of your Conquests in India to Porus, besides his own Dominions, which you restored to him entire, after you had beaten his Army and taken him Captive.

ALEXANDER.

I gave him the Government of those Countries under me, and as my Lieutenant; which was the best method of preserving my Power in Conquests, where I could not leave Garrisons sufficient to maintain them. The same Policy was afterwards practised by the Romans, who of all Conquerors, except me, were the greatest Politicians. But neither was I, nor were they so extravagant, as to conquer only for Others, or dethrone Kings with no view, but merely to have the pleasure of bestowing their Crowns on some of their subjects, without any advantage to Ourselves. Nevertheless, I will own, that my Expedition to India was an Exploit of the Son of Jupiter, not of the Son of Philip. I had done better if I had staid to give more Consistency to my Persian and Grecian Empires, instead of attempting new Conquests, and at such a distance, so soon. Yet even this War was of Use to hinder

my

my Troops from being corrupted by the Effeminacy of Asia; and to keep up that universal Awe of my Name, which in those Countries was the great Support of my Power.

CHARLES.

In the unwearied Activity with which I proceeded from one Entreprize to another, I dare call myself your equal. Nay, I may pretend to a higher Glory than you, because you only went on from Victory to Victory; but the greatest Losses were not able to diminish my Ardour, or stop the Efforts of my daring invincible Spirit.

ALEXANDER.

You shewed in Adversity much more Magnanimity than you did in Prosperity. How unworthy of a Prince who imitated me, was your behaviour to the King your Arms had vanquished! The compelling Augustus to write himself a Letter of Congratulation to one of his Vassals, whom you had placed in his Throne, was the very Reverse of my treatment of Porus and Darius. It was an ungenerous insult upon his ill fortune! It was the Triumph of a little and a low Mind! The Visit you made him immediately after that insult was a farther contempt, offensive to him, and both useless and dangerous to yourself.

CHARLES.

I feared no Danger from it. — I knew he durst not use the Power I gave him to hurt me.

ALEXANDER.

If his Resentment, in that instant, had prevailed over his Fear, at it was likely to do, you would have perished deservedly by your Insolence and Presumption. For my part, intrepid as I was in all Dangers, which I thought it was necessary or proper for me to meet, I never put myself one moment in the Power of an Enemy whom I had offended. But you had the Rashness of Folly as well as of Heroism. A false Opinion conceived of your Enemy's Weakness proved at last your Undoing. When, in answer to some reasonable Propositions of Peace, sent to you by the Czar, you said, "You would come and treat with him at Moscow;" he replied very justly, "That you affected to act like Alexander, but should "not find in Him a Darius." And, doubtless, you ought to have been better acquainted with the Character of that Prince. Had Persia been governed by a Peter Alexiowitz when I made war against it, I should have acted more cautiously, and not have have counted so much on the Superiority of my Troops, in Valour and Discipline, over an Army commanded by a King, who was so capable of instructing them in all they wanted.

CHARLES.

That Battle of Narva, won by eight thousand Swedes against fourscore thousand Muscovites, seemed to authorize my Contempt of the Nation and their Prince.

ALEXANDER.

It happened that their Prince was not present in that Battle, But he had not as yet had the time, which was necessary to instruct his barbarous Soldiers. You gave him that time, and he made so good a use of it, that you found at Pultáwa the Muscovites become a different Nation. If you had followed the Blow you gave them at Narva, and marched directly to Moscow, you might have destroyed their Hercules in his Cradle. But you suffered him to grow, till his strength was mature, and then acted as if he had been still in his Childhood.

CHARLES.

I must confess you excelled me in Conduct, in Policy, and in true Magnanimity. But my Liberality was not inferior to your's; and neither you nor any Mortal ever surpassed me in the Enthusiasm of Courage. I was also free from those Vices which sullied your Character. I never was drunk; I killed no Friend in the Riot of a Feast; I fired no Palace at the Instigation of a Harlot.

ALEXANDER.

It may perhaps be admitted as some Excuse for my Drunkenness, that the Persians esteemed it an Excellence in their Kings to be able to drink a great quantity of Wine, and the Macedonians were far from thinking it a Dishonour. But you were as frantic, and as cruel, when sober, as I was, when drunk. You were sober when you resolved to continue in Turkey against the Will of your Host, the Grand Signor. You were sober when you commanded the unfortunate Patkull, whose only crime was his having maintained the Liberties of his Country, and who bore the sacred Character of an Embassador, to be broken alive on the Wheel, against the Laws of Nations, and those of Humanity, more inviolable still to a generous Mind. You were likewise sober when you wrote to the Senate of Sweden, who, upon a Report of your Death, endeaendeavoured to take ſome care of your Kingdom, That, you would ſend them one of your Boots, and from That they ſhould receive their Orders, if they pretended to meddle in Government: An Inſult much worſe than any the Macedonians complained of from me, when I was moſt heated with Wine and with Adulation! As for my Chaſtity, it was not ſo perfect as your's, though on ſome Occaſions I obtained great Praiſe for my Continence: but, perhaps, if you had been not quite ſo inſenſible to the Charms of the fair Sex, it would have mitigated and ſoftened the Fierceneſs, the Pride, and the Obſtinacy of your Nature.

CHARLES.

It would have ſoftened me into a Woman, or, what I think ſtill more contemptible, the Slave of a Woman. But you ſeem to inſinuate that you never were cruel or frantic unleſs when you were drunk; This I abſolutely deny. — You were not drunk, when you crucified Hephæſtion's Phyſician, for not curing a Man who killed himſelf by his Intemperance in his Sickneſs; nor when you ſacrificed to the Manes of that favourite Officer the whole Nation of the Cuſſeans, Men, Women, and Children, who were entirely innocent of his Death; becauſe you had read in Homer, that Achilles had immolated ſome Trojan Captives on the Tomb of Patroclus. I could mention other Proofs that your Paſſions inflamed you as much as Wine: but theſe are ſufficient.

ALEXANDER.

I can't deny that my Paſſions were ſometimes ſo violent a to deprive me for a while the Uſe of my Reaſon; eſpecially when the Pride of ſuch amazing Succeſſes, the Servitude of the Perſians, and Barbarian Flattery, had intoxicated my Mind. To bear, at my Age, with continual Moderation, ſuch Fortune as mine, was hardly in human Nature. As for you, there was an Exceſs and Intemperance in your Virtues, which turned them all into Vices. And one Virtue you wanted, which in a Prince is very commendable, and beneficial to the Public, I mean the Lowe of Science and to the elegant Arts. Under my Care and Patronage they were carried in Greece to their utmoſt Perfection. Ariſtotle, Apelles, and Lyſippus were among the Glories of my Reign: Your's was illuſtrated only by Battles. — Upon the whole, though, from ſome Reſemblance between us, I ſhould naturally be inclined to decide in your favour, yet I muſt give

give the Priority in Renown to your Enemy, Peter Alexiowitz. That great Monarch raiſed his Country; You ruined your's. He was a Legiſlator, you were a Tyrant.

DIALOGUE IV.

HERNANDO CORTEZ — WILLIAM PENN.

CORTEZ.

Is it poſſible, William Penn, that you ſhould ſeriouſly compare your Glory with mine! The Planter of a ſmall Colony in North America preſume to vie with the Conqueror of the great Mexican Empire!

PENN.

Friend, I pretend to no Glory, — the LORD preſerve me from it. — All Glory is his; but this I ſay, that I was his Inſtrument in a more glorious Work than that performed by thee: incomparably more glorious.

CORTEZ.

Doſt thou not know, William Penn, that with leſs than ſix hundred Spaniſh Foot, eighteen Horſe, and a few ſmall pieces of Cannon, I fought and defeated innumerable Armies of very brave Men, dethroned an Emperor who had been raiſed to the Throne by his Valour, and excelled all his Countrymen in the Science of War, as much as they excelled all the reſt of the Weſt Indian Nations? that I made him my Priſoner in his own Capital; and, after he had been depoſed and ſlain by his Subjects, vanquiſhed and took Guatimozin, his ſucceſſor, and accompliſhed my Conqueſt of the whole Empire of Mexico, which I loyally annexed to the Spaniſh Crown? Doſt thou not know, that, in doing theſe wonderful Acts, I ſhewed as much Courage as Alexander the Great, as much Prudence as Cæſar? That, by my Policy, I ranged under my Banners the powerful Commonwealth of Tlaſcála, and brought them to aſſiſt me in ſubduing the Mexicans, though with the loſs of their own beloved Independence? and that, to conſummate my Glory, when the Governor of Cuba, Velaſquez, would have taken my Command from me, and ſacrificed me to his Envy and Jealouſy, I drew from him all his forces and joined them to my own, ſhewing myſelf as ſuperior to all other Spaniards as I was to the Indians?

PENN.

PENN.

I know very well that thou was as fierce as a Lion, and as ſubtle as a Serpent. The Devil, perhaps, may place thee as high in his black liſt of Heroes as Alexander or Cæſar. It is not my Buſineſs to interfere with him in ſettling thy Rank. But hark thee, Friend Cortez — What Right hadſt thou, or had the King of Spain himſelf, to the Mexican Empire? Anſwer me that, if thou canſt.

CORTEZ.

The Pope gave it to my Maſter.

PENN.

The Devil offered to give our LORD all the Kingdoms of the Earth, and I ſuppoſe the Pope, as his Vicar, gave thy Maſter this: in return for which he fell down and worſhipped him, like an Idolater as he was. But ſuppoſe the High Prieſt of Mexico had taken it into his head to give Spain to Motezuma, would his Grant have been good?

CORTEZ.

Theſe are Queſtions of Caſuiſtry, which it is not the buſineſs of a Soldier to decide. We leave that to Gownſmen. But pray, Mr. Penn, what Right had you to the Province you ſettled?

PENN.

An honeſt Right of fair Purchaſe. We gave the native Savages ſome things they wanted, and they in return gave us Lands they did not want. All was amicably agreed on, not a drop of blood ſhed to ſtain our Acquiſition.

CORTEZ.

I am afraid there was as little Fraud in the Purchaſe. Thy Followers, William Penn, are ſaid to think cheating in a quiet and ſober way no mortal ſin.

PENN.

The Saints are always calumniated by the Ungodly. But it was a Sight which an Angel might contemplate with delight, to behold the Colony I ſettled! To ſee us living with the Indians like innocent Lambs, and taming the Ferocity of their barbarous Manners by the Gentleneſs of ours! To ſee the whole Country, which before was an uncultivated Wilderneſs, rendered as fertile and fair as the Garden of GOD! O Hernando Cortez, Hernando Cortez! didſt thou leave the great Empire of Mexico in that State? No, thou hadſt turned turned those delightful and populous Regions into a Desert, a Desert flooded with Blood. Dost thou not remember that most infernal Scene, when the noble Emperor Guatimozin was stretched out by thy Soldiers upon hot burning Coals, to make him discover into what part of the Lake of Mexico he had thrown the Royal Treasures? Are not his Groans ever sounding in the ears of thy Conscience? Do not they rend thy hard Heart, and strike thee with more Horror than the Yells of the Furies?

CORTEZ.

Alas! I was not present when that dire Act was done. Had I been there I would have forbidden it. My nature was mild.

PENN.

Thou wast the Captain of that Band of Robbers, who did this horrid Deed. The advantage they had drawn from thy Counsels and Conduct enabled them to commit it: and thy Skill saved them afterwards from the Vengeance that was due to so enormous a Crime. The enraged Mexicans would have properly punished them for it, if they had not had thee for their General, thou Lieutenant of Satan.

CORTEZ.

The Saints I find can rail; William Penn. But how do you hope to preserve this admirable Colony which you have settled? Your people, you tell me, live like innocent Lambs. Are there no Wolves in North America to devour those Lambs? But if the Americans should continue in perpetual peace with all your Successors there, the French will not. Are the Inhabitants of Pensylvania to make war against them with Prayers and Preaching? If so, that Garden of GOD which you say you have planted, will undoubtedly be their Prey, and they will take from you your Property, your Laws, and your Religion.

PENN.

The LORD's will be done. The LORD will defend us, against the rage of our Enemies if is be his good Pleasure.

CORTEZ.

Is this the Wisdom of a great Legislator? I have heard some of your Countrymen compare you to Solon! Did Solon, think you, give Laws to a People, and leave those Laws and that People at the Mercy of every Invader? The first Business of Legislature is to provide a military Strength tha may defend defend the whole Syſtem. If a Houſe is built in a land of Robbers, without a Gate to ſhut, or a Bolt or Bar to ſecure it, what avails it how well-proportioned, or how commodious the Architecture of it may be? It is richly furniſhed within? the more it will tempt the hands of Violence and of Rapine to ſeize its Wealth. The World, William Penn, is all a Land of Robbers. Any State or Commonwealth erected therein muſt be well fenced and ſecured by good military Inſtitutions; or, the happier it is in all other reſpects, the greater will be its Danger, the more ſpeedy its Deſtruction. Perhaps the neighbouring Engliſh Colonies may for a while protect your's: but that precarious Security cannot always preſerve you. Your Plan of Government muſt be changed, or your Colony will be loſt. What I have ſaid is alſo applicable to Great Britain itſelf. If an Encreaſe of its Wealth be not accompanied with an Encreaſe of it's Force, that Wealth will become the Prey of ſome of the neighbouring Nations, in which the Martial Spirit is more prevalent than the Commercial. And whatever praiſe may be due to its civil Inſtitutions, if they are not guarded by a wiſe Syſtem of military Policy, they will be found of no value, being unable to prevent their own diſſolution.

PENN.

Theſe are Suggeſtions of Human Wiſdom. The Doctrines I held, were inſpired; they came from above.

CORTEZ.

It is blaſphemy to ſay, that any Folly could come from the Fountain of Wiſdom. Whatever is inconſiſtent with the great Laws of Nature, and with the neceſſary State of Human Society, cannot poſſibly have been inſpired by GOD. Selfdefence is as neceſſary to Nations as to Men. And ſhall Particulars have a Right which Nations have not? True Religion, William Penn, is the Perfection of Reaſon. Fanaticiſm is the Diſgrace, the Deſtruction of Reaſon.

PENN.

Though what thou ſayeſt ſhould be true, it does not come well from thy mouth. Go to the Inquiſition, and tell them of Reaſon, and the great Laws of Nature. They will broil thee, as thy Soldiers broiled the unhappy Guatimozin. Why doſt thou turn pale? It is the name of the Inquiſition, or the name of Guatimozin, that troubles and affrights thee? O wretched Man! who madeſt thyſelf a voluntary Inſtrument to carry into a newdiſcovered World that helliſh Tribunal. Tremble and ſhake when thou thinkeſt, that every Murder the Inquiſitors have committed, every Torture they have inflicted on the innocent Indians, is originally owing to thee. Thou muſt anſwer to GOD for all their Inhumanity, for all their Injuſtice. What wouldſt thou give to part with the Renown of thy Conqueſts, and to have a conſcience as pure and undiſturbed as mine?

CORTEZ.

I feel the force of thy Words. They pierce me like Daggers. I can never, never be happy, while I retain any memory of the Ills I have cauſed.—Yet I thought I did right. I thought I laboured to advance the Glory of GOD, and propagate in the remoteſt Parts of the Earth his holy Religion, He will be merciful to well deſigning and pious Error. Thou alſo wilt have need of that gracious Indulgence; though not, I own, ſo much as I.

PENN.

Aſk thy Heart, whether Ambition was not thy real Motive, and Zeal the Pretence?

CORTEZ.

Aſk thine, whether thy Zeal had no worldly Views, and whether thou didſt believe all the Nonſenſe of the Sect, at the head of which thou waſt pleaſed to become a Legiſlator. Adieu. — Self-Examination requires Retirement.

DIALOGUE V.

MERCURY — and a modern fine LADY.

MRS. MODISH.

Indeed, Mr. Mercury, I cannot have the pleaſure of waiting upon you now. I am engaged, abſolutely engaged.

MERCURY.

I know you have an amiable affectionate huſband, and ſeveral fine children; but you need not be told, that neither conjugal attachments, maternal affections, nor even the care of a Kingdom's welfare or a Nation's glory, can excuſe a perſon who has received a ſummons to the realms of Death. If the grim meſſenger was not as peremtory as unwelcome, Charon would would not get a passenger, (except now and then an hypochoudriacal Englishman) one in a century. You must be content to leave your husband and family, and pass the Styx.

Mrs. Modish.

I did not mean to insist on any engagement with my husband and children; I never thought myself engaged to them. I had no engagements but such as were common to women of my rank. Look on my Chimney-piece, and you will see I was engaged to the Play on Mondays, Balls on Tuesdays, the Opera on Saturdays, and to Card-assemblies the rest of the week, for two months to come; and it would be the rudest thing in the world not to keep my appointments. If you will stay for me till the Summer-season, I will wait on you with all my heart. Perhaps the Elysian Fields may be less detestable than the country in our world. Pray have you a fine Vauxhall and Ranelagh? I think I should not dislike drinking the Lethe Waters when you have a full Season.

Mercury.

Surely you could not like to drink the waters of Oblivion, who have made Pleasure the business, end, and aim of your Life! It is good to drown cares, but who would wash away the remembrance of a Life of Gaiety and Pleasure.

Mrs. Modish.

Diversion was indeed the business of my Life, but as to Pleasure I have enjoyed none since the novelty of my amusements was gone off. Can one be pleased with seeing the same thing over and over again? Late hours and fatigue gave me the Vapours, spoiled the natural chearfulness of my Temper, and even in youth wore away my youthful vivacity.

Mercury.

If this way of Life did not give you Pleasure, why did you continue in it? I suppose you did not think it was very meritorious?

Mrs. Modish.

I was too much engaged to think at all: so far indeed my manner of Life was agreeable enough. My friends always told me diversions were necessary, and my Doctor assured me dissipation was good for my Spirits; my husband insisted that it was not, and you know that one loves to oblige one's friends, comply with one's Doctor, and contradict one's husband; and besides I was ambitious to be thought *du Bon ton.)

MERCURY.

Bon ton! what is that, Madam? Pray define it.

Mrs. MODISH.

Oh Sir, excuse me, it is one of the Privileges of the Bon ton never to define, or be defined. It is the child and the parent of Jargon. It is — I can never tell you what it is: but I will try to tell you what it is not. In conversation it is not Wit; in manners it is not Politeness; in behaviour it is not Address; but it is a little like them all. It can only belong to people of a certain rank, who live in a certain manner, with certain Persons, who have not certain Virtues, and who have certain Vices, and who inhabit a certain Part of the Town. Like a place by courtesy, it gets an higher rank than the person can claim, but which those who have a legal title to precedency dare not dispute, for fear of being thought not to understand the rules of Politeness. Now, Sir, I have told you as much as I know of it, though I have admired and aimed at it all my life.

MERCURY.

Then, Madam, you have wasted your time, faded your Beauty, and destroyed your health, for the laudable purposes of contradicting your husband, and being this something and this nothing called the Bon ton.

Mrs. MODISH.

What would you have had me do?

MERCURY.

I will follow your mode of instructing. I will tell you what I would not have had you do. I would not have had you sacrifice your time, your reason, and your Duties, to fashion and folly. I would not have had you neglect your husband's happiness, and your childrens education.

Mrs. MODISH.

As to the Education of my Daughters, I spared no expence; They had a dancing-master, music-master, and drawing-master; and a French governess to teach them behaviour and the French Language.

MER-

*) Du bon ton is a cant Phrase in the modern French Language for the fashionable Air of Conversation and Manners.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0068
DFG

MERCURY.

So their religion, ſentiments and manners were to be learnt from a dancing-maſter, muſic-maſter, and a chambermaid! Perhaps they might prepare them to catch the Bon ton. Your daughters muſt have been ſo educated as to fit them to be wives without conjugal affection, and mothers without maternal care. I am ſorry for the ſort of life they are commencing, and for that which you have juſt concluded. Minos is a ſour old Gentleman, without the leaſt ſmattering of the Bon ton, and I am in a fright for you. The beſt thing I can adviſe you is to do in this world as you did in the other, keep happineſs in your view, but never take the road that leads to it. Remain on this ſide the Styx; wander about without end or aim; look into the Elyſian Fields, but never attempt to enter into them, leſt Minos ſhould puſh you into Tartarus: for Duties neglected may bring on a Sentence not much leſs ſevere than Crimes committed.

ACCOUNT OF THE PRESENT KING OF SPAIN.*)

This day I have ſeen the King; and I muſt ſay that a prominent noſe, a piercing eye, and a ſerene countenance, make him look much better than his coin repreſents him. I have ſeen ſeveral portraits of him, even one by his favourite Mengs: but neither Mengs, nor any other painter, had given me a true idea of his face, which is pleaſing, though made up of irregular features.

As to his perſon, it is of a good ſize, and his walk quite Bourbonian; that is, erect and ſteady. He appears to be robuſt, and I am told that he has a great deal of bodily ſtrength. His complexion is quite ſun-burnt, which is undoubtedly the conſequence of his paſſion for the chace. In this reſpect he is a true Meleager. No degree of heat or cold can keep him from this exerciſe. You may poſſibly think it worth the while to read an account of the life he leads; and here it is, as I had it from people who have been daily witneſſes of it for many years.

*) Baretti's Journey from London to Genoa, through England, Portugal, Spain and France. London 1770. 8.

Every day in the year he gets up about ſix, and exactly at ſeven comes out of his bed-room in his night-gown. He finds waiting in the anti-chamber a Gentilhombre de Camera, a Mayordomo de Semana, a phyſician, a ſurgeon, and ſeveral other regular attendants, with whom he interchanges words while dreſſing. The Gentilhombre, kneeling on one knee, preſents a diſh of chocolate, which the King drinks almoſt cold. He then diſmiſſes ſome of them with a nod, enters his private chapel, and hears a maſs: then retires to a cloſet, to which no body is ever admitted, and there reads or writes, eſpecially on thoſe days that he does not intend to go ahunting in the morning.

About eleven he comes out of the cloſet to meet the whole royal family. They all kiſs his hand, or offer to do it, lowering a knee. He embraces them all, kiſſing the Princes at the cheek, and the Princeſſes on the forehead.

The royal family withdraw after a little chit-chat, and he gives a momentary audience to his confeſſor: then ſpeaks to thoſe miniſters of ſtate, who have any buſineſs to communicate, or paper to ſign. Then the Family Ambaſſadors come in: that is, the French and the Neapolitan. With them the King interchanges words for a quarter of an hour; ſeldom more. Juſt againſt the time that he is going to dine, the other Ambaſſadors and foreign Miniſters come in. Exactly at twelve he ſits down to table, quite alone now as his queen is dead. The Ambaſſadors and foreign Miniſters, his own Miniſters of State, the great officers of his army, and ſeveral other great perſonages, pay their court while he falls to eating, and all thoſe whom the guards have permitted to get in, croud round the table to ſee him dine. The Cardinal-patriarch of the Indies ſays grace, not as Cardinal or Patriarch, but as his chief Chaplain.

The ceremony of the table is this. The Mayordomo Mayor ſtands on the King's right hand, and a captain of his body-guards on his left. One of the weekly Mayordomos, two Gentilhombres de Camera, and a croud of pages and ſervants attend promiſcuouſly. One of the two Gentilhombres carves, the other gives him drink. The diſhes, all covered, are brought in one by one in an uninterrupted ſucceſſion by pages and each diſh is put into the hands of the carving Gentilhombre, who takes it with one hand, uncovers it with the other, and preſents it to the King. The King gives a nod of approbation or diſapprobation at every diſh. Thoſe that are approved, the Gentilhombre places upon the Table: the reſt are carried back. Many howewer are the diſhes approved, which ſtill are not touched as the King eats only of the plaineſt, and always with a good appetite.

preſents

The Gentilhombre who gives him drink, pours firſt a few drops of wine and water in a ſilver-ſalver that has a beak, and drinks that himſelf; then kneels on one knee, and pours of both to the king, firſt the water, then the wine, which is always Burgundy.

When the King has drank his firſt glaſs, the Ambaſſadors and foreign Miniſters, who ſtood the while and all in a row on the King's right hand, make their bows, and go to pay their reſpects to the reſt of the royal family that are all at their dinners, each in his or her own appartment, the Prince of Aſturias alone, Don Luis alone, the Infanta alone and the two younger Infantes together. All theſe tables are ſumptuous.

Near a hundred diſhes are generally ſerved to the King, of which about forty are laid upon the table. When they are removed, an ample deſert ſucceeds: but he ſeldom taſtes of it; except ſometimes a little bit of cheeſe and ſome fruit. The laſt thing that is preſented is a glaſs of canary-wine with a ſweet biſcuit. He breaks the biſcuit in two, ſteeps it in the wine, and eats it, but never drinks the wine.

A moment before he riſes from table, which laſts near an hour, the Ambaſſadors, and foreign Miniſters return, paſs before him, and go into an adjoining room, where they wait for his coming. With them he converſes about half an hour upon indifferent matters.

He then re-enters his private apartment to put on his huntingdreſs; that is a grey frock of coarſe cloth, made at Segovia on purpoſe for him, and a leather waiſtcoat. The leather breeches he always puts on when he gets from bed, eſpecially on thoſe days that he intends to go a-hunting. Light boots, a hat flapp'd before, and ſtrong leather gloves complete thiſs dreſs. While the boots are putting on, the Sommelier de Corps (Duke of Loſada) gives him a diſh of coffee. Between one and two he ſteps into his coach drawn by ſix or eight mules, and away with his brother Don Luis the mules galloping ventre à terre. Half a dozen of his body-guards precede the coach on horſe-back, and three footmen ride behind it.

No bad weather, as I ſaid, is ever an obſtacle to his going out on hunting-days, not even a ſtorm of hail accompanied by thunder and lightning. Don Luis, who is his conſtant attendant in the coach, is the only perſon allowed to fire at the game on theſe daily huntings. But on ſolemn huntings ſome of the grandees who wait on him at the chace, are granted the ſame privilege. However of late the ſolemn huntings are become rare, becauſe the expence of them was found too great.

A little after ſun-ſet he generally comes back, carrying as much of the feather-game in his hands as he can hold. As to the quadrupeds he has killed, ſuch as ſtags, deer, wildboars, wolves, foxes, &c. they are brought to the palace in carts. He ſurveys the whole, orders it to be weighed in his preſence, and rejoices when there is much, moſt particulary when he has killed a wolf or two. It is but ſeldom that he takes the Prince of Aſturias to hunt with him.

When the game is weighed and ordered to the kitchen, he goes to pay a ſhort viſit to the Queen-Mother; then gives a private audience to that Miniſter, whoſe day it happens to be, as each of them has his fixed day of private audience. The Miniſter brings his papers in a bag, and offers to his inſpection thoſe that are to the purpoſe of his errand. If the Miniſter's buſineſs leaves him any time, he plays at Reverſino (a game at cards ſo called) with three of his courtiers, generally the Duke de Loſada Sommelier de Corps, Duke d'Arcos Capitan de la Compañia Eſpañola, and another grandee whoſe name I have forgotten. He never plays for any thing, having recourſe to this expedient merely to conſume a quarter of an hour, or half an hour that he muſt wait for his ſupper. At nine he ſits down to it, attended only by his courtiers: then goes to bed, to get up again next day to the ſame round of occupations, and with the ſame ſcrupulous nicety of method in the diſtribution of them, ſeldom or never to be altered, except on poſt-days, when, inſtead of going to hunt, he paſſes ſome more time, both morning and afternoon, in the private cloſet, writing to his ſon at Naples, to his brother at Parma, to his ſiſters in Turin and Liſbon, and very often likewiſe to Marquis Tanucci and to the Prince of Santo Niccandro, the firſt of whom he has made chief Miniſter, and the ſecond Ayo, or governour, to his Sicilian Majeſty.

If

If on poſt-days he has any time left, it is employed in his laboratory; that is, in the completeſt turner's ſhop that ever exiſted. He is a moſt expert turner, and works toys to perfection. The ſhop contains many turning engines of rare invention, ſome of which were preſents from the King of France, and ſome contrived by Count Zazzola, one of the greateſt mechaniſts of the age. By him his Majeſty is attended when working in the laboratory.

As to his perſonal character, he was certainly a good huſband when his Queen was alive. Never once dit he ſwerve from conjugal fidelity, nor ever had any miſtreſs public or private. His brothers were always his beſt friends and moſt familiar companions; and as to his children there is no need of ſaying that he always proved a kind father. He is rather an eaſy, than an affectionate maſter, never deſcending to gread familiarity with his ſervants, yet always ſatisfy'd with what they do. They ſay that he never betrayed any great love to any body out of his own family, no more than hatred. It happened once, that he detected one of his moſt familiar domeſtics in a Lye, and forbad him his preſence, but ſtill continued him his ſalary. His converſation is generally chearful, but always as chaſte as his conduct. He repoſes much confidence in his chief Miniſters, eſpecially Marquis Squillace, who has found the means of prepoſſeſſing him in favour of his own abilities; yet neither Squillace, nor any body elſe, was ever a favourite, when by a favourite we mean a man admitted by a Sovereign to the cloſeſt intimacy of friendſhip.

The King uſes every body with a ſort of condeſcenſion that may be called civility, which impreſſes his ſervants with a ſtrong ſenſe of real reſpect, independent of his Kindſhip, as the rigidity of his morals gives them no room for the leaſt contempt. His method of ſpending time, ſo unalterably regular, may appear ſomewhat dull: but is certainly laudable, and it is quite neceſſary that a King ſhould have his Miniſters and his ſervants exactly appriſed of the hours, and even the minutes, that they are to aproach him for the diſpatch of buſineſs in their reſpective ſtations and employments.

Every body here agrees, that his Majeſty is far from wanting knowledge of men or things. He has read much, and never paſſes a day without looking into a book. Beſides his native tongue, he ſpeaks Italian and French with the greateſt fluency and propriety, nor is he ignorant of the Latin.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0073
DFG

They ſay, that he knows his own as well as other Princes intereſt full as well as any of his Miniſters, and does not ſpare any expence to be early informed of whatever paſſes in Europe and out of Europe that may affect him any way.

Since he came to this throne, he never would ſuffer any Italian opera to be performed either at Madrid or Aranjúez, as was practiſed in the former reign.

His Majeſty, beſides retrenching this abſurd Article of expence, has leſſened that of his ſtables, ſo that he as much reduced the vaſt debt with which he found himſelf encumbered, by which means, if not interrupted by war, I ſuppoſe the whole will be diſcharged in about 20 Years. He viſits the Queen-Mother every day, and treats her with the profoundeſt reſpect.

On every gala-day, his Majeſty puts on a new ſuit, and as rich as art can make it: but all his fine cloaths are conſtantly made after the faſhion that was uſed in his younger years, and he always appears impatient to undreſs, being never eaſy, until he reſumes his grey frock and leather waiſtcoat. He was always an enemy to all ſort of innovation, and ſo ſteady in uniformity, that he wore for above twenty years a ſilver-watch. His Queen inſiſted often upon his changing it for a better, but to no purpoſe. Yet, to get rid of her importunity, and inceſſant jokes, reſolved at laſt to have a goldcaſe to it, which he made himſelf on the lathe.

When he reſolved to give the kingdom of Naples to his ſon, every body expected that he would ſend to Spain all the antique monuments that had been dug out of Herculaneum. But little did they know him that formed ſuch conjectures, as on the ſame day that he crowned that ſon, he went to the place where thoſe monuments were depoſited, and there left a ring he had worn many years, which had been found in thoſe ruins, ſaying, that he had no right to any thing that belonged to another Monarch.

The place where the King hunts is called the Pardo; the ſituation is very romantic, having an eaſy hill on one ſide, and an extenſive foreſt all round; the trees are chiefly green oaks, and their ſweet acorns afford plenty of food to the innumerable animals that live in it. When the King is there, the neighbouring peaſants geet up before day, at the ringing of their church bells, and men, women, and children, run about the country, country, hooting and beating the buſhes, in order to fright the game towards the Pardo, that the King may have plenty, for which each of them is paid two reals, about eleven pence ſterling a day. It is ſaid that the King can hit the ſmalleſt bird on the wing with a ſingle ball.

And authentic Narrative of the Death of MARK ANTHONY CALAS, and of the Trial and Execution of his Father, JOHN CALAS, for the ſuppoſed Murder of his Son.

John Calas was a merchant of the city of Toulouſe; where he had been ſettled, and lived in good repute, forty years; He married an Engliſh woman of French extraction, her grandmother being of the family of Garde-Montesquieu, and related to the chief nobleſſe of Languedoc.

Calas and his wife were Proteſtants, and had five ſons, whom they educated in the ſame religion: But Lewis, one of the ſons, ſome time ſince became a Roman Catholic; his father's maid-ſervant, a religious Catholic, who had lived thirty years in the family, having greatly contributed to his converſion; but the father was ſo far from expreſſing any reſentment or ill-will on the occaſion, that he ſettled an annuity upon Lewis, and ſtill kept the maid in his family.

In October 1761, the family ſeems to have conſiſted of the father John Calas and his wife, one woman ſervant, Mark Anthony Calas the eldeſt ſon, and Peter Calas, the ſecond ſon. Mark Anthony had been educated as a ſcholar, with a view to his becoming an advocate or counſellor at law; but he was not able to get himſelf admitted as a licenciate, becauſe he muſt either have performed ſome acts, which, as a Proteſtant, he could not have performed; or have purchaſed certificates, which he either thought unlawful, or found too expenſive. He could not follow the buſineſs of a merchant, becauſe he was not qualified for it by his education, nor his turn of mind; mind; he therefore became discontented and melancholy, and endeavoured to dissipate the gloom of his mind by playing at billiards, and other expensive pleasures, of which his father often expressed his disapprobation with some warmth, and once threatened, that if he did not alter his conduct, he would turn him out of doors; or expressed himself in words to that effect. The young man's discontent and melancholy still increased, and he seems to have entertained thoughts of putting an end to his life, as he was continually selecting and reading passages from Plutarch, Seneca, Montaigne, and many other authors on suicide, and could say by heart a French translation of the celebrated soliloquy in Hamlet, wich he frequently repeated, with some passages from a French Tragi-Comedy, called Sidney, to the same effect.

On the 13th of October 1761, M. Cober la Vaisse, a young gentleman about nineteen years of age, the son of La Vaisse, a celebrated advocate of Toulouse, having been some time at Bourdeaux, came back to Toulouse to see his father; but finding that his father was gone to his country house, at some distance from the city, he went to several places, endeavouring to hire a horse to carry him thither. No horse, however, was to be hired; and about five o'clock in the evening he was met by John Calas, the father and the eldest son Mark Anthony, who was his friend. Calas, the father, invited him to supper, as he could not set out for his father's that night, and La Vaisse consented. All three therefore proceeded to Calas's house together, and when they came thither, finding that Mrs Calas was still in her own room, which she had not quitted that day, La Vaisse went up to see her. After the first compliments, he told her, he was to sup with her by her husband's invitation; she expressed her satisfaction, and a few minutes afterwards left him, to give some orders to her maid. When that was done, she went to look for her son Anthony, whom she found sitting alone in the shop, very pensive; she gave him some money, and desired him to go and buy some Roquefort cheese, he being always the market man for cheese, as he knew how to buy it better than any other of the family.

She then returned to her guest La Vaisse, who very soon after went again to the livery-stable, to see if any horse was come in, that he might secure it for the next morning.

In a short time Anthony returned, having bought the cheese, and La Vaisse also coming back about the same time, the family family and their gueſt ſat down to ſupper in a room up one pair of ſtairs, the whole company conſiſting of Calas the father and his wife, Anthony and Peter Calas, the ſons, and La Vaiſſe the gueſt, no other perſon being in the houſe except the maid-ſervant, who has been already mentioned.

It was now about ſeven o'clock; the ſupper was not long; but before it was over, or, according to the French expreſſion, when they came to the deſert, Anthony left the table, and went into the kitchen, which was on the ſame floor, as he uſed to do; the maid aſked him if he was a-cold; he anſwered, Quite the contrary; I burn; and then left her. In the mean time his friend and the family left the room they had ſupped in, and went into a bed-chamber: the father and M. La Vaiſſe ſat down together on a ſofa; the younger ſon Peter in an elbow-chair, and the mother in another chair; and without making any enquiry after Anthony, continued in converſation together till between nine and ten o'clock, when La Vaiſſe took his leave, and Peter, who had fallen aſleep, was awaked to attend him with a light. *)

On the ground floor of Calas's houſe was a ſhop and a warehouſe; the warehouſe was divided from the ſhop by a pair of folding door: When Peter Calas and La Vaiſſe came down ſtairs into the ſhop, they were extremely ſhocked to ſee Anthony hanging in his ſhirt, from a bar which he had laid acroſs the top of the two folding doors, having half opened them for that purpoſe. Upon diſcovery of this horrid ſpectacle, they ſhrieked out, and the cry brought down Calas the father, the mother being ſeized with ſuch a terror as kept her trembling in the paſſage above. The unhappy old man ruſhed forward, and taking the body in his arms, the bar

*) This little narrative contains a picture of domeſtic life, which muſt be altogether new to an Engliſh reader. A merchant who had bred his eldeſt ſon a ſcholar, in order to have him called to the bar, ſends this ſon out to buy cheeſe, having only one ſervant in the family, who, after preparing the ſupper, ſets in upon the table at ſeven o'clock, and leaves the company to wait upon themſelves: This ſupper, however, had what they call a deſert; but before it is over, Anthony, the eldeſt ſon, the particular friend of the gueſt, leaves the table, and goes into the kitchen; no enquiry was made about him, though the company continued together above two hours afterwards; they ſpent their evening in a bedchamber, having left the eating room with the table ſtill covered; as ſoon as they had ſupped, ſon Peter goes to ſleep, and is not diſturbed till he is wanted to wait upon the gueſt with a light.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0077
DFG

bar to which the rope that ſuſpended him was faſtened, ſlipped off from the folding doors of the warehouſe, and fell down: Having placed the body on the ground, he looſed and took off the cord, in an agony of grief and anguiſh not to be expreſſed, weeping, trembling, and deploring himſelf and his child. The two young men, his ſecond ſon and La Vaiſſe, who had not had preſence of mind enough to attempt taking down the body, were ſtanding by, ſtupid with amazement and horror; in the mean time the mother, hearing the confuſed cries and complaints of her huſband, and finding no-body come to her, found means to get down ſtairs. At the bottom ſhe found La Vaiſſe, and haſtily and eagerly demanded what was the matter: this queſtion rouzed him in a moment, and inſtead of anſwering her, he urged her to go again up ſtairs, to which, with much reluctance, ſhe conſented; but the conflict of her mind being ſuch as could not be long borne, ſhe ſent down the maid, Jannet, to ſee what was the matter; when the maid diſcovered what had happened, ſhe continued below, either becauſe ſhe feared to carry an account of it to her miſtreſs, or becauſe ſhe buſied herſelf in doing ſome good office to her maſter, who was ſtill embracing the body of his ſon, and bathing it in his tears. The mother therefore, being thus left alone, went down, and mixed in the ſcene, that has been already deſcribed, with ſuch emotions as it would naturally produce. In the mean time, Peter had been ſent for La Moire, a ſurgeon in the neighbourhood; La Moire was not at home, but his apprentice, M. Groſſe, came inſtantly. Upon examination, he found the body quite dead; and upon taking off the neckcloth, which was of black taffety, he ſaw the mark of the cord, and immediately pronounced, that the deceaſed had been ſtrangled. This particular had not been told; for the poor old man, when Peter was going for La Moire, cried out, "Save at leaſt the honour of my family; do not go and ſpread a report that your brother has made away with himſelf."

By this time a crowd of people was gathered about the door, and one Caſſing, with another friend or two of the family were come in; ſome of thoſe who were in the ſtreet had heard the cries and exclamations of the father, the mother, the brother, and his friend, before they knew what was the matter; and having by ſome means learnt that Anthony Calas was ſuddenly dead, and that the ſurgeon who had examined the body, declared he had been ſtrangled, they took it into their

their heads that he had been murdered; and as his family were Proteſtants, they preſently ſuppoſed that the young man was about to abjure their religion, and had been put to death for that reaſon. The cries they had heard, they fancied were thoſe of the deceaſed, while he was reſiſting the violence that was offered him. The tumult in the ſtreet increaſed every moment; ſome ſaid that Anthony Calas was to have abjured the next day; others, that Proteſtants are bound by their religion to ſtrangle or cut the throats of their children, when they are inclined to become Catholics. Others, who had found out that La Vaiſſe was in the houſe when the accident happened, very confidently affirmed, that the Proteſtants, at their laſt aſſembly, appointed a perſon to be their common executioner on theſe occaſions, and that La Vaiſſe was the man, who, in conſequence of the office tho which he had been appointed, had come to Calais's to hang his ſon.

The poor father, therefore, who was overwhelmed with grief for the loſs of his child, was adviſed by his friends to ſend for the officers of juſtice, to prevent his being torn to pieces for having murdered him.

This was accordingly done: One was diſpatched to the Capitoul, one David, the firſt magiſtrate of the police, or principal civil magiſtrate of the place; and another to an inferior officer, called an aſſeſſor. The Capitoul, was already ſet out, having been alarmed by the rumour of a murder, before the meſſenger ſent from Calas's got to his houſe. He entered the houſe with 40 ſoldiers, took the father, Peter the ſon, the mother, La Vaiſſe, and the maid, all into cuſtody, and ſet a guard over them: He ſend for M. de la Tour, a phyſician, and M. La Marque and Perronet, ſurgeons, who examined the body for marks of violence, but found none except the mark of the ligature on the neck; they found alſo the hair of the deceaſed done up in the uſual manner, perfectly ſmooth, and without the leaſt diſorder; his cloaths alſo were regularly folded up, and laid upon the counter, nor was his ſhirt either torn or unbuttened.

Notwithſtanding theſe appearances, David thought fit to give into the opinion of the mob, and took it into his head that old Calas had ſend for La Vaiſſe, telling him he had a ſon to be hanged, that La Vaiſſe had come to perform his office of executioner, and that the father and the brother had aſſiſted him in it.

The

The body, by order of this poor ignorant bigot, was carried to the town-house with the cloaths. The father and son were thrown into a dark dungeon; and the mother, La Vaisse, the maid, and Casing, were imprisoned in one that admitted the light. The next day, what is called the verbal process was taken at the Town-house, instead of the spot where the body was found, as the law directs, and was dated at Calas's house, to conceal the irregularity. This verbal process is somewhat like our Coroner's Inquest; witnesses are examined, and the magistrate makes his report, which is the same there as the verdict of the coroner's jury with us. The witnesses examined by this Capitoul were the physician and surgeon, who proved Anthony Calas to have been strangled; the surgeon having been ordered to examine the stomach of the deceased, deposed also, that the food which was found there had been taken four hours before his death: As no proof of the supposed fact could be procured, the Capitoul had recourse to a Monitory, in which the crime was taken for granted, and all persons were required to give such testimony concerning it as they were able, particularizing the points to which they were to speak. This Monitory recites, that La Vaisse was commissioned by the Protestants to be their executioner in ordinary, when any of their children were to be hanged for changing their religion; it recites also, that when Protestants thus hang their children, they compel them to kneel, and one of the interrogatories was, whether any person had seen Anthony Calas kneel before his father when he strangled him; it recites too, that Anthony died a Roman Catholic, and requires evidence of his Catholicism. These ridiculous opinions being thus adopted and published by the principal magistrate of a considerable city, the church of Geneva thought itself obliged to send an attestation of its abhorrence of opinions so abominable and absurd, and of its astonishment that they should be suspected of such opinions, by persons whose rank and office required them to have more knowledge and better judgment.

But before this Monitory was published, the mob had got a notion that Anthony Calas was the next day to have entered into the fraternity of the White Penitents. The Capitoul immediately adopted this opinion also, without the least examination, and ordered Anthony's body to be buried in the middle of St. Stephens's church, which was done; forty priests, and all the white penitents assisting in the funeral procession.

Four

Four days afterwards, the White Penitents performed a solemn service for him in their chapel; the church was hung with white, and a tomb was raised in the middle of it, on the top op which was placed a human skeleton, holding in one hand a paper, on which was written abjuration of heresy, and in the other a palm, the Emblem of Martyrdom.

The next day the Franciscans performed a service of the same kind for him, and it is easy to imagine how much the minds of the people were inflamed by this strange folly of their magistrates and priests.

The Capitoul continued the prosecution with unrelenting severity, and though the grief and distraction of the family when he first came to the house, were alone sufficient to have convinced any reasonable being that they were not the authors of the event which they deplored, yet having publickly attested that they were guilty in his monitory without proof, and no proof coming in, he thought fit to condemn the unhappy father, mother, brother, friend and servant to the torture, and put them all into irons on the 18th of November. Casing was enlarged upon proof that he was not in Calas's house till after Anthony was dead.

From these dreadful proceedings the sufferers appealed to the parliament, which immediately took cognizance of the affair, annulled the sentence of the Capitoul as irregular, and continued the prosecution.

When the tryal came on, the hangman, who had been carried to Calas's house, and shewn the folding doors and the bar, deposed, that it was impossible Anthony should hang himself as was pretended; another witness swore that they looked through the key hole of Calas's door into a dark room, where they saw men running hastily to and fro; a third swore, that his wife had told him, that a woman, named Mandrill, had told her, that a certain woman unknown had declared she heard the cries of Mark Anthony Calas at the farther end of the city. Upon such evidence as this, the majority of the parliament were of opinion, that the father and mother ordered La Vaisse to hang their son, and that another son and a maid servant, who was a good Catholic, had assisted him to do it.

One la Borde presided at the tryal, who had zealously espoused the popular prejudices, and though it was manifest to demonstration that the prisoners were either all innocent, or all guilty, he voted that the father should first suffer the torture ordinary and extraordinary, to discover his accomplices, and be then broken alive upon the wheel, to receive the laſt ſtroke when he had lain two hours, and then to be burnt to aſhes. In this opinion he had the concurrence of ſix others, three were for the torture alone, two were of opinion that they ſhould endeavour to aſcertain upon the ſpot whether Anthony could hang himſelf or not, and one voted to acquit the priſoner. After long debates, the majority was for the torture and the wheel, and probably condemned the father by way of experiment, whether he was guilty or not, hoping he would, in his agony, confeſs the crime, and accuſe the other priſoners, whoſe fate, therefore, they ſuſpended. It is, however, certain, that if they had had evidence againſt the father that would have juſtified the ſentence they pronounced againſt him, that very evidence would have juſtified the ſame ſentence againſt the reſt, and that if they could not juſtly condemn the reſt, they could not juſtly condemn him, for they were all in the houſe together when Anthony died, all concurred in declaring he hanged himſelf, which thoſe who dit not help to hang him, if hanged by others, could have had no motive to do, nor could any of the priſoners have hanged him by violence without the knowledge of the reſt.

Poor Calas, however, an old man of ſixty-eight, was condemned to this dreadful puniſhment alone; he ſuffered the torture with great conſtancy, and was led to execution in a frame of mind which excited the admiration of all that ſaw him.

Two Dominicans, Father Bourges and Father Galdagues, who attended him in his laſt moments, wiſhed, "that their latter end might be like his," and declared that they thought him not only wholly innocent of the crime laid to his charge, but an exemplary inſtance of true chriſtian patience, fortitude, and charity.

One ſingle ſhriek, and that not very violent, eſcaped him when he received the firſt ſtroke; after that he uttered no complaint. Being at length placed on the wheel, to wait for the moment which was to end his life and his miſery together, he expreſſed himſelf with an humble hope of an happy immortality, and a compaſſionate regard for the judges who had condemned him. When he ſaw the executioner preparing to give him the laſt ſtroke, he made a freſh declaration of his innocence to Father Bourges, but while the words were yet in his mouth, the Capitoul, the author of this cataſtrophe, and who came upon the ſcaffold merely to gratify his deſire of being a witneſs of his puniſhment and death, ran up to him and bawled out, Wretch, there are the faggots which are to reduce your body to aſhes; ſpeak the truth. Calas made no reply, but turned his head a little aſide, and that moment the executioner did his office.

and

Though the teſtimony of a dying man had thus acquitted the reſt of the priſoners, yet the judges, that they might act with a uniform abſurdity through the whole affair, baniſhed Peter Calas for life, and acquitted the reſt. The widow and the other ſufferers are ſeeking ſuch redreſs from the king as can now be had, to whom the ſentence of the judges was not ſent for confirmation as it ought to have been.

The judges have thought fit to ſuppreſs the trial; the widow petitions that it may be ordered to be laid before the parliament of Paris for a reviſion.

ANSON'S VOYAGE TO ASIA. *)

The Centurion and Glouceſter left the coaſt of America the 6th of May 1742. The firſt land in Aſia which they could reach was the Iſlands Ladrones, which are ſeparated from America by near one third of the globe's circumference. But as the N. E. winds, which are favourable for this voyage, uſually blow between the tropics, the Engliſh could not think that they could be longer about in than the Spaniards, who generally perform it in two months. In this confidence they put to ſea, and ſtood for the latitude where the moſt regular winds are expected: but, contrary of their expectations, the wind ſhifted ſo often, and they had ſo many ſtrong gales at W. that, in ſeven weeks, they had not proceeded one fourth of the voyage. Several misfortunes happen'd during this tedious delay. Both ſhips ſprung their maſts in ſeveral places, and being obliged to keep their pumps continually going, on account of the leaks, it was an inſupportable fatigue to the men, the greateſt part of whom were weakened by the ſcurvy.

Tho' they had plenty of proviſions, and tho' the rains conſtantly ſupplied them with water, and all poſſible care was taken to keep the ſhips cool and clean; yet the ſcurvy continued its havock, notwithſtanding all their ſkill and

*) A Voyage round the World by George Anſon Esq. compiled by R. Walter. Lond. 1748. 8. Gentleman's Magazine 1749.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0083
DFG

precaution: and even when the fair winds set in towards the end of June, the voyage was far from being so speedy as might have been hoped. The Gloucester having lost her main mast, sail'd heavily, and the Centurion lost near a month in waiting for her. When they were within 300 leagues of the port, the Gloucester's other masts were all carried away by some contrary gales; nor were her crew any longer able to free her of water; so that on the 15th of August, having taken out the most necessary stores, they set her on fire; and on the 23d they made some islands, which were the first that they had seen during this long passage; and on the 26th, while they were regretting the apparent difficulty of landing at any of these, and fearing they should not get sight of any others, they discovered three more. Of one of these, a boat, which they had taken, gave them such an inviting account, that they immediately set about landing their men. The sick, who were now grown very numerous, were, without delay, put on shore, being carried on the shoulders even of their officers, their humane Commodore setting the example. Here they recover'd surprisingly, so that all the time they stay'd, they lost but ten men. Their quick recovery was owing to the acid fruits and anti scorbutic plants, as well as to the healthful qualities of the air. Beasts, fowls, and vegetables were here in great abundance; and tho' there was no river, this defect was amply supply'd by several reservoirs of excellent water, issuing from the springs. But, as the finest countries are subject to some inconveniencies, so was this delightful island of Tinian. The chief is the want of harbours, for there is but one place where ships can anchor, which is to the S E. and this, from the middle of June to the middle October, is exposed to very furious tempests, which blow at the new and full moons. The coral, which spreads all over the bottom of the sea, wounds the cables, so that they easily part in a strong current, or hart gale. This the Centurion experienced on the 22d of September, when a strong gust of wind broke both her cables, and drove her from the coast, so that it was 19 days before she could get back again. As the greatest part of the ship's company was on shore with Mr. Anson, only 108 men were on board, and most of them sickly. This was a number so unequal to the working of the pumps, and at the same time navigating the ship, that it was impossible for them to bring her sooner back to the island, where indeed she had been given over for lost. The Commodore, who at first shew'd

no

no ſigns of uneaſineſs, was unable to conceal the emotion of his mind, when, ſome days after the ſhip's departure, he perceived two boats, which ad firſt he imagined to belong to the Centurion, and feared that the ſhip was foundered, and that the perſons who had ſaved themſelves in theſe boats, were all that remained of the crew. This conjecture, but eſpecially the apprehenſion that all the expected glory and advantage of his hazardous expedition was irretrievably prevented, affected him ſo ſtrongly that he retired to his tent, that he might have no witneſſes to the grief and anguiſh which he could no longer ſuppreſs. Except this ſingle inſtance of human frailty, which ſome perſons have inſolently cenſured, his conſtancy, his prudence, his ſerenity, and alacrity, juſtly excite our aſtoniſhment, and deſerve our imitation: and from this he ſoon recover'd, reſuming his uſual chearfulneſs. He told his men, that, as the ſhip had not been able to regain the iſland, it was probable that ſhe was gone for Chili, and that the only means which remained to meet her there, was to ſaw the boat which they had taken through the middle, and lengthen it, ſo that it might be large enough to carry them all. He not only exhorted them to this work, but, to encourage them in forwarding it, he himſelf condeſcended to be a workman. Moſt of the ſhip's carpenters happening to be on the iſland, they ſoon got tools and materials ready to join the two ends of the boat, when, on the 11th of October, the ſhip again appeared, and put an end at once to their labour and apprehenſions. Mr. Anſon immediately went on board, with the greateſt part of his men; and tho', ſome days after, the was again driven off, the crew, being now ſtronger, brought her back into the road in five days. The ſailors who had been left on ſhore, had already begun to refit the boat, which would conveniently have held their ſmall number. But being at laſt once more got all together, they left this iſland, where they had experienced the greateſt viciſſitudes of joy and conſternation. This laſt trip proved more proſperous, and they arrived at Macao on the 12th of December, which was the firſt friendly port they had ſeen during two years. The Portugueſe governor ſhew'd himſelf both a weak counſellor and a timorous friend. For tho' he was inclined to favour Mr. Anſon, his ſelfiſh dependence on the Chineſe hinder'd him from doing it effectually. He adviſed him againſt going to Canton, to avoid a diſpute with the inhabitants, who not being uſed to ſee ſhips of that force, would inſiſt upon the ſame fees which merchant ships paid, and from which a man of war might justly think itself exempt Upon receiving this account, the Commodore sail'd to a small port called Typa, and here he was put to infinite trouble in procuring necessaries from the Chinese, because they are strictly attached, by their interest, to the Spaniards of Manilla. They regarded the English Commodore as no better than a powerful pirate, and this, joined with the perfidy of their Mandarines, the venality of their courts of justice, and the fraud of their traders, occasion'd delay after delay, in fitting their ship, and buying the necessary stores and provisions. Mr Anson, out of patience at being thus amused and retarded, was at length convinced that resolution and threatenings availed more than courtesy and presents. Accordingly, having at length procured the ship to be refitted and victualled, he left Typa the 6th, and Macao the 19th of April 1743. Mr Anson, when he was about to leave this port, had given out that he was going to return to Europe; and, tho' this seem'd impracticable at that season, by reason of the western monsoon, he had made his men believe, that, in confidence of their skill, and the goodness of the ship, he would venture to attempt it; for he was persuaded that, if his intention upon the Manilla galleon had taken wind at Macao, the Spaniards would have been soon apprized of it by their Chinese friends. But, notwithstanding all his precaution to keep at such a distance from the Philippine islands as not to be perceived, they had often sight of him; and the governor of Manilla, at the instances of the merchants, had resolved to send out some ships of force against him. But the contrary winds, the slowness in fitting out the largest ship, and especially the dissensions among the proprietors, happily retarded this expedition. Nor was this the only scheme which proved abortive; for when the Centurion was repairing at Typa, and consequently unable to make any defence, some Spaniards had form'd a design to send thither a kind of fireship, in order to destroy her. But tho' no more than 40,000 crowns was required for an action which would have saved a million, the merchants, suspecting the governor's view was only to get the money into his hands, could not be brought to advance it; and thus the English owed the safety of their ship to the mistrust and parsimony of their enemies.

Mr Anson was no sooner at sea, than he called the ship's company upon deck, and told them his design was to go and wait for the Acapulco ship at Cape Spirito Santo, that being her her conſtant courſe in her return to Manilla; adding that, notwithſtanding it had been given out that the ſides of this ſhip were cannon proof, he was reſolved to be ſo near to her, that his ſhot ſhould go in at one ſide and out at the other. This ſpeech animated them with hopes of obtaining that ineſtimable prize, and they waited for her off the cape with unexampled patience for above a month. At length, on the 20th of June, the galleon, the object of their hopes, appeared, and ſo far from ſeeming to ſhun the Centurion, ſhe boldly made towards her, and prepared for an engagement. But Mr. Anſon keeping a continual fire both with his guns and ſmall arms, at which his ſhip's company were very expert, he ſoon became maſter of this rich galleon. For the Spaniards, ſeeing a great many of the common men, and eſpecially of the officers, fall, were ſo terrified, that they ſtruck to an enemy who was not half their number. The name of the prize was the Nueſtra Señora de Cabadonga; and ſhe was much larger than the Centurion, mounted 36 guns, and 27 padereroes, with 550 men. Don Jeronimo de Montaro, who was commander, was eſteemed the beſt ſeaman of all the captains of the galleons, and was ſtiled General. The Engliſh were informed by their priſoners that the ſhip which laſt year had been detained at Acapulco, had ſet out this year on her return ſooner than ordinary, and muſt have reached Manilla before Mr. Anſon got to the cape, where he had the good fortune to meet with them; ſo that the delays of the Chineſe may be ſaid to have hinder'd Mr. Anſon from taking another prize. However, this being ſo immenſely rich, they did not much regret the diſappointment. All that remained now, was to carry their prize to ſome port in China; and during the voyage, which proved but ſhort, the priſoners were ſecured as far as humanity would admit of, an account being taken of the cargo, and the treaſure put on board the Centurion. There were on board 1,313,843 pieces of eight, and 35,632 ounces of ſilver, which, with what the Engliſh had before taken from the Spaniards, amounted to 400,000 l. ſterling. And if to this ſum we add the effects which were deſtroy'd, to the value of at leaſt 600,000 l. the charges of Pizzarro's fleet, and the expences of repairing the fortifications in America, it will appear that the Spaniards were very great ſufferers; and, conſequently, that expedition of the Engliſh fleet was of conſiderable advantage to their country. Mr. Anſon arrived at Macao the 11th of July, and ſailing from thence to the river of Canton, he

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0087
DFG

advanced through the narrow paſſage which defends the harbour, notwithſtanding a meſſage which the Chineſe had ſent to forbid him. The two forts on each ſide the gut did not preſume to make any oppoſition, with their batteries of 8 or 10 iron guns, as it muſt have been to their own loſs. But the governors, as well as the pilot, whom Mr. Anſon had compelled to carry his ſhip in, were puniſhed for permitting what they could not prevent. This reſolution, together with the vaſt riches of the Engliſh, raiſed their character with a timorous and mercenary people. Some Spaniards, who had been permitted to go on ſhore, ſpoke in very honourable terms of their conquerors. Mr. Anſon had wrote tho the Viceroy for a ſupply of proviſions, and an audience. The firſt was readily granted him, but the audience was deferred upon pretence of the heat; but, in reality, to gain time for receiving orders from his court. The accuſtomed duty was alſo required: but, upon the commodore's inflexibly perſiſting in a refuſal, the Mandarines, who had been deputed by the Viceroy, made no farther mention of it, requiring only that the Spaniſh priſoners ſhould be ſet at liberty. Some ſeeming difficulties were made on this head, to give it the appearance of a favour, tho', in reality, the Engliſh wanted to be rid of them.

It would be no leſs tedious than unneceſſary to relate all the preparations the Engliſh made for their return, and the obſtructions which the Chineſe, whether out of fear, intereſt, or formality, were continually throwing in their way. In ſhort, Mr. Anſon was obliged himſelf to go up to Canton, and enforce his orders in perſon. Being now ready to depart, he ſent the Viceroy another meſſage, to remind him of the audience he had deſired. This probably would have been again put off, but for the following accident: A fire broke out with ſuch violence, that it ſoon ſpread thro' a great part of the city, and probably would have conſumed the whole, had it not been extinguiſhed by the blodneſs and activity of the Engliſh ſailors. For this ſervice they received the thanks of the citizens, and the Viceroy immediately granted an audience, in which all Mr. Anſon's demands met with a ready compliance. Upon which, having ſold the Spaniſh galleon to ſome merchants at Macao, he left that port the 15th of December, and returned to Europe by the ſtreights of Sunda, and the Cape of Good Hope. The 15th of June was the auſpicious day which gave him a ſight of his country, after an abſence of three years and nine months, in an expedition which will be an eternal monument, monument, that, tho' prudence, intrepidity, and perſeverance united, are not exempted from the blows of adverſe fortune; yet in a long ſeries of tranſactions, they uſually riſe ſuperior to its power, and in the end rarely fail of proving ſucceſsful.

Account
of Sir CHARLES GRANDISON'S reſcuing MISS HARRIET BYRON. *)

Mr. REEVES, to GEORGE SELBY, Eſq;

Dear Mr. Selby, Friday, Febr. 17.

No one, at preſent, but yourſelf, muſt ſee the contents of what I am going to write.

But how ſhall I tell you the news; the dreadful news? — You muſt not — But how ſhall I ſay, You muſt not, be too much affected, when we are unable to ſupport ourſelves?

O my couſin Selby! — We know not what is become of our deareſt Miſs Byron!

I will be as particular as my grief and ſurprize will allow. There is a neceſſity for it, as you will find.

We were laſt night at the Ball in the Hay-market.

The chairmen who carried the dear creature, and who, as well as our chairmen, were engaged for the night, were inveigled away to drink ſomewhere. They promiſed Wilſon, my couſin's ſervant, to return in half an hour.

It was then but little more than twelve.

Wilſon waited near two hours, and they not returning, he hired a chair to ſupply their place.

Between two and three, we all agreed to go home. The dear creature was fatigued with the notice every-body took of her. Every body admired her. She wanted to go before; but Lady Betty prevailed on her to ſtay a little longer.

She hurried into it becauſe of her dreſs, and being warm; and no leſs than four gentlemen following her to the very chair.

I ordered Wilſon to bid the chairmen ſtop, when they had got out of the croud, till Lady Betty's chair, and mine, and my wife's, joined them.

*) The Hiſtory of Sir Charles Grandiſon. Lond. 1754. 6 Vol. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0089
DFG

I ſaw her chair move, and Wilſon with his lighted flambeaux before it; and the four maſks who followed her to the chair, return into the houſe.

When our ſervants could not find that her chair had ſtopt, we ſuppoſed that in the hurry, the fellow heard not my orders; and directed our chairmen to proceed; not doubting but we ſhould find her got home before us.

We had before agreed to be carried directly home; declining Lady Betty's invitation to reſume our own dreſſes at her houſe, where we dreſſed for the Ball.

We were very much ſurpriſed at finding her not arrived: But concluding that, by miſtake, ſhe was carried to Lady Betty's, and was there expecting us, we ſent thither immediately.

But, good God! what was our conſternation, when the ſervants brought us word back, that Lady Betty had not either ſeen or heard of her!

Mr. Greville, as I apprehend — you know he is a man of enterprize.

He came to town, having profeſſedly no other material buſineſs but to give obſtruction to my couſin's viſitors. He ſaw ſhe had two new ones. He talked at firſt of ſtaying in town, and partaking of its diverſions, and even of beſpeaking a new equipage.

But all of a ſudden, tho' expecting Mr. Fenwick would come up, he pretended to leave the town, and to ſet out directly for Northamptonſhire, without having obtained any conceſſion from my couſin in his favour.

Laying all theſe circumſtances together, I think it is hardly to be doubted, but Mr. Greville is at the bottom of this black affair.

I have ſix people out at different parts of the town, who are to make enquiries among chairmen, coachmen, &c.

Her new ſervant cannot be a villain — What can one ſay! — What can one think?

We have ſent to his ſiſter, who keeps an inn in Smithfield. She has heard nothing of him.

I had half a ſuſpicion of Sir Hargrave, as well from the character given us of him by a friend of mine, as becauſe of his unpolite behaviour to the dear creature on her rejecting him: And ſent to his houſe in Cavendiſh-ſquare, to know if he were at home, and if he were, at what time he returned from the Ball.

Anſwer

Anſwer was brought, that he was in bed, and they ſuppoſed would not be ſtirring till dinner-time; when he expected company; and that he returned not from the Ball till between four and five this morning.

You will be ſo good, as to diſpatch the bearer inſtantly with what information can be got about Mr. Greville.

Ever, ever Yours!

ARCHIBALD REEVES.

Mr. SELBY, to ARCHIBALD REEVES, Eſq;

Saturday, Febr. 18.

O Mr. Reeves! — Dear ſweet child! — Flower of the world! —

How could I conceal my conſternation! — My wife ſaw it. She would know the cauſe of it.

I could not tell her the fatal news — Fatal news indeed! It will be immediate death to her poor grandmother. —

We muſt keep it from her as long as we can! — But keep it from her! — And is the deareſt creature ſpirited away? — O Mr. Reeves!

I gave my wife your Letter. She fainted away, before ſhe had read it thro'.

Maſquerades, I have generally heard ſaid, were more ſilly than wicked: But they are now, I am convinced, the moſt profligate of all diverſions.

Some damned villain, to be ſure! — Greville it is not. Greville was ſeen late laſt night, alighting at his own houſe from a poſt-chaiſe. He had no-body with him.

Find out where ſhe is: And find her ſafe and well: Or we will never forgive thoſe who were the cauſe of her going to London.

Dear ſoul! She was over-perſuaded! She was not fond of going!

Search every-where — But you will, no doubt! — Suſpect every-body — This Lady Betty Williams — Such a plot muſt have a woman in it. Was ſhe not Sir Hargrave's friend? — This Sir Hargrave! — Greville it could not be. Had we not the proof I mentioned, Greville, bad as he is, could not be ſuch a villain.

✕

Greville was this moment here.

We

We could not see him. We did not let him know the matter.

He is gone away, in great surprize, on the servants telling him that we had received some bad news, which made us unfit to see any-body. The servants could not tell him what: Yet they all guess, by your livery, and by our grief, that something has befallen their beloved young Lady. They are all in tears — And they look at us, when they attend us, with such inquisitive, yet silent grief! — We are speechless before them; and tell them our wills by motions, and not by words.

Good God! — After so many happy years! — Happy in ourselves! to be at last in so short a time made the most miserable of wretches!

But this had not been, if — But no more — Good God of heaven, what will become of my pour aunt Shirley! — But no more — Hasten your next — And forgive this distracted Letter. I know not what I have written. But I am

Yours,

GEORGE SELBY.

Mr. REEVES, to GEORGE SELBY, Esq;

Every hour we have one messenger or other returning with something to say, but hitherto with nothing to the purpose. This has kept me within. O Mr. Selby, I know not what to direct! I know not what to do! I send them out again as fast as they return: Yet rather shew my despair, than my hope.

Surely this villany must be Mr. Greville's. Tho' I have but just dispatched away my servant to you, I am impatient for his return.

We begin to suspect the servant (that Wilson) whom my cousin so lately hired. Were he clear of the matter, either he or the chairmen he hired, must have been heard of. He would have returned. They could not all three be either murdered or secreted.

one o'Clock,

Lady Betty's chairmen have found out, and they brought with them, one of the fellows whom that vile Wilson hired. The other was afraid to come. I have secured this fellow: Yet he seems to be ingenuous; and I have promised, that if he prove innocent, he shall be rewarded instead of punished; and and the two chairmen, on this promiſe, are gone to try to prevail upon his partner to come, were it but to releaſe the other, as both inſiſted upon their innocence.

And now will you be impatient to know what account this fellow gives.

O Mr. Selby! The dear, dear creature — But before I can proceed, I muſt recover my eyes.

Two o'Clock.

This fellow's name is Macpherſon. His partner's Mc Dermot. This is Macpherſon's account of the matter.

Wilſon hired them to carry his young Lady to Paddington. — To Paddington! A vile dog! —

They objected diſtance and danger; the latter, as Macpherſon owns, to heighten the value of the ſervice.

As to the danger, Wilſon told him, they would be met by three others of his fellow-ſervants, armed, at the firſt fields: And as to the diſtance, they would be richly rewarded; and he gave them a crown a piece earneſt, and treated them beſides with brandy.

To prevent their curioſity, and entirely to remove their difficulties, the villain told them, that his young Lady was an heireſs, and had agreed to go off from the Maſquerade with her Lover: But that the gentleman would not appear to them till ſhe came to the very houſe, to which ſhe was to be conveyed.

She thinks, ſaid the helliſh villain, that ſhe is to be carried to May-Fair Chapel, and to be married directly; and that the miniſter (unſeaſonable as the hour is) will be there in readineſs. But the gentleman, who is a man of the utmoſt honour, intends firſt to try whether he cannot obtain her friends conſent. So when ſhe finds her way lengthened, proceeded the vile wretch, ſhe will perhaps be frightened, and will aſk me queſtions. I would not for the world diſoblige her; but here ſhe muſt be cheated for her own ſake; and when all is over, will value me the more for the innocent impoſture. But whatever orders ſhe may give you, obſerve none but mine, and follow me. You ſhall be richly rewarded, repeated the miſcreant. Should ſhe even cry out, mind it not: She is full of fears, and hardly holds in one mind for an hour together.

He further cautioned them not to anſwer any queſtions which might poſſibly be aſked of them, by the perſon who ſhould ſhould conduct his young Lady to her chair; but refer to himſelf: And in caſe any other chairs were to go in company with hers, he bid them fall behind, and follow his flambeaux.

Macpherſon ſays, that ſhe drew the curtains cloſe (becauſe of her dreſs, no doubt) the moment I had left her, after ſeeing her in chair.

The fellows thus prepoſſeſſed and inſtructed, ſpeeded away, without ſtopping for our chairs. Yet the dear creature muſt have heard me give that direction.

They had carried her a great way before ſhe called out: And then ſhe called three times before they would hear her, at the third time they ſtopt, and her ſervant aſked her commands. Where am I, William? ſaid ſhe. Juſt at home, madam, anſwered he. Surely you have taken a ſtrange round-about way. We are come about, ſaid the raſcal, on purpoſe to avoid the croud of chairs and coaches.

They proceeded onwards, and were joined by three men, as Wilſon had told them they would; but they fancied one of them to be a gentleman; for he was muffled up in a cloak, and had a ſilver-hilted ſword in his hand: But he ſpoke not. He gave no directions: And all three kept aloof, that they might not be ſeen by her.

At Maribone, ſhe again called out; William, William, ſaid ſhe, with vehemence: The Lord have mercy upon me! Where are you going to carry me? Chairmen, ſtop! Stop, chairmen! Set me down! — William! — Call my ſervant, chairmen! —

The chairmen called him. They lifted up the head. The ſide curtains were ſtill undrawn, and Mc Dermot ſtood ſo cloſe, that ſhe could not ſee far before her. Did you not tell me, ſaid the villain to them, that it was not far about? — See how you have frighted my Lady! — Madam, we are now almoſt at home.

They proceeded with her, ſaying, they had indeed miſtaken their way; but they were juſt there; and hurried on.

She then undrew the ſide curtains — Good God of heaven protect me! they heard her ſay — I am in the midſt of fields — They were then at Liſſom-Green.

They heard her pray; and Macpherſon ſaid, he began then to conclude, that the Lady was too much frightened, and too pious, to be in a Love-plot.

But, nevertheleſs, beckoned by their villainous guide, they hurried on: And then ſhe ſcreamed out; and happening to ſee one of the three men, ſhe begged his help for God's ſake.

to

The fellow bluſtered at the chairmen, and bid them ſtop. She aſked for Groſvenor-ſtreet. She was to be carried, ſhe ſaid, to Groſvenor-ſtreet.

She was juſt there, that fellow ſaid — It can't be, Sir! It can't be! Don't I ſee fields all about me? — I am in the midſt of fields, Sir.

Groſvenor-Square, madam, replyed that villain; the trees and garden of Groſvenor-Square.

What a ſtrange way have you come about! cried her miſcreant: And then trod out his flambeaux; while another fellow took the chairmens lantern from them; and they had only a little glimmering ſtar-light to guide them.

She then, poor dear ſoul! ſcreamed ſo diſmally; that Macpherſon ſaid, it went to his heart to hear her. But they following Wilſon, who told them they were juſt landed, that was his word, he led them up a long garden-walk, by a back-way. One of the three men having got before, opened the garden-door, and held it in his hand; and by the time they got to the houſe to which the garden ſeemed to belong, the dear creature ceaſed ſcreaming.

They too well ſaw the cauſe, when they ſtopt with her. She was in a fit.

Two women, by the aſſiſtance of the perſon in the cloak, helped her out, with great ſeeming tenderneſs. They ſaid ſomething in praiſe of her beauty, and expreſſed themſelves concerned for her, as if they were afraid ſhe was paſt recovery: Which apparently ſtartled the man in the cloak.

Wilſon entered the houſe with thoſe who carried in the dear creature; but ſoon came out to the chairmen. They ſaw the man in the cloak (who hung about the villain; and hugged him, as in joy) give the raſcal money: who then put a guinea into each of their hands; and conveyed them thro' the garden again, to the door at which they entered; but refuſed them light even ſo much as that of their own candle and lantern. However he ſent another man with them, who led them over rough and dirty by-ways into a path that pointed London-ward; but plainly ſo much about with deſign to make it difficult for them to find out the place again.

✕

The other fellow is brought hither: He tells exactly the ſame ſtory.

I asked of both, what sort of man he in the cloack was; but he so carefully muffled himself up, and so little appeared to them, either walking after them, or at the house, that I could gain no light from their description.

On their promise to be forth-coming, I have suffered them to go with Lady Betty's chairmen to try if they can trace out their own footsteps, and find the place.

⁂

The four chairmen are just returned. They think they have found the place; but having gained some intelligence (intelligence which distracts me!) they hurried back for directions.

They had asked a neighbouring alehouse-keeper, if there were not a long garden (belonging to the house they suspected) and a back-door out of it to a dirty lane and fields. He answered in the affimative. The front of this house faces the road.

They called for some hot liquors; and asked the landlord after the owners. He knew nothing of harm of them, he said. They had lived there near a twelvemonth in reputation. The family consisted of a widow, whose name is Awberry, her son and two daughters. The son (a man of about thirty years of age) has a place in the Custom-house, and only came down on a Saturday, and went up on Monday. But an odd circumstance, he said, had alarmed him that very morning.

He was at first a little shy of telling what it was. He loved, he said, to mind his own business: What other people did was nothing to him: But, at last, he told them, that about six o'clock in the morning he was awakened by the trampling of horses; and looking out of his window, saw a chariot-and six, and three or four men on horseback, at the widow Awberry's door. He got up. The footmen and coachmen were very hush, not calling for a drop of liquor, tho' his doors were open: A rare instance, he said, where there were so many men-servants together, and a coachman one of them. This, he said, could not but give a greater edge to his curiosity.

About seven o'clock, one of the widow's daughters came to the door, with a lighted candle in her hand, and directed the chariot to drive up close to the house. The alehouse-keeper then slipt into an arbour-like porch, next door to the widow's; where he had not been three minutes before he saw two persons come to the door; the one a tall gentleman in laced cloaths, who had his arms about the other, a person of middling middling ſtature, wrapt up in a ſcarlet cloak; and reſiſting, as one in great diſtreſs, the other's violence, and begging not to be put into the chariot, in a voice and accent, that evidently ſhewed it was a woman.

The gentleman made vehement proteſtations of honour; but lifted the Lady into the chariot. She ſtruggled, and ſeemed to be in agonies of grief; and on being lifted in, and the gentleman going in after her, ſhe ſcreamed out for help; and he obſerved in the ſtruggling, that ſhe had on, under her cloak, a ſilverlaced habit (The Maſquerade habit, no doubt!) Her ſcreaming grew fainter and fainter, and her voice ſounded to him, as if her mouth were ſtopped. And the gentleman ſeemed to ſpeak high, as if he threatened her.

Away drove the chariot. The ſervants rode after it.

In about half an hour, a coach and four came to the widow's door; the widow and her two daughters went into it, and it took the ſame road.

The alehouſe-keeper had afterwards the curioſity to aſk the maid-ſervant, an ignorant country wench, whither her miſtreſſes went ſo early in the morning? She anſwered they were gone to Windſor, or that way, and would not return, ſhe believed, in a week.

O this damn'd Sir Hargrave! He has a houſe upon the foreſt. I have no doubt but he is the villain. Who knows what injuries the dear creature might have ſuſtained before ſhe was forced into the chariot? — God give me patience! Dear ſoul! Her prayers! Her ſtruggling! Her crying out for help! Her mouth ſtopt! — O the villain!

I have ordered as many men and horſes as two of my friends can furniſh me with, to be added to two of my own (we ſhall be nine in all) to get ready with all ſpeed. I will purſue the villain to the world's end, but I will find him.

I have, however, accepted Lady Betty's offer of her ſteward's going with the two chairmen, to get what farther intelligence he can from Paddington, againſt my return.

At four in the morning the ſix men I borrow, and myſelf, and two of my ſervants, well armed, are to rendezvous at Hyde-Park Corner. It is grievous that another night muſt paſs. But ſo many people cannot be got together as two or three might.

My poor wife has made me promiſe to take the aſſiſtance of peace-officers, where-ever I find either the villain, or the ſuffering angel.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0097
DFG

Where the road parts, we shall divide, and enquire at every turnpike; and shall agree upon our places of meeting.

I am harassed to death: But my mind is the greatest sufferer.

✕

O my dear Mr. Selby! We have tidings — God be praised, we have tidings — Not so happy indeed as were to be wished: Yet the dear creature is living, and in honourable hands — God be praised!

Read the inclosed Letter directed to me.

SIR,

Miss Byron is in safe and honourable hands.

The first moment she could give any account of herself, she besought me to quiet your heart, and your Lady's, with this information.

She has been cruelly treated.

Particulars, at present, she cannot give.

She was many hours speechless.

But don't fright yourselves: Her fits, tho' not less frequent, are weaker and weaker.

The bearer will aquaint you who my Brother is; to whom you owe the preservation and safety of the loveliest woman in England; and he will direct you to a house where you will be welcome with your Lady (for Miss Byron cannot be removed) to convince yourselves that all possible care is taken of her, by, Sir,

Friday, Feb. 17. Your humble Servant,
CHARLOTTE GRANDISON.

In fits! — Has been cruelly treated! — Many hours speechless! — Cannot be removed! — Dearest, dear creature! — But you will rejoice with me, my cousins, that she is in such honourable hands.

She is at a nobleman's house, the Earl of L. near Colnebrooke.

I shall set out before day, on horseback. My servant shall carry with him a portmanteau of things, ordered by my wife. My cousin must have made a strange appearance in her Masquerade dress, to her deliverer.

The honest man who brought the Letter was but just returned from Windsor, whither he had been sent early in the morning, to transact some business, when he was dispatched away away to us with the welcome Letter. He could not therefore be so particular as we wished him. What he gathered was from the housekeeper; the men-servants, who were in the fray (A fray there was!) being gone to town with their master. But what we learnt from him, is, briefly, as follows:

His master is Sir Charles Grandison; a gentleman who has not been long in England. I have often heard mention of his father, Sir Thomas, who died not long ago. This honest man knew not when to stop in his master's praise. He gives his young Lady also an excellent character.

Sir Charles was going to town in his chariot-and-six when he met (most happily met!) our distressed cousin.

Sir Hargrave is the villain.

Sir Charles had earnest business in town; and he proceeded thither, after he had rescued the dear creature, and committed her to the care of his sister. — God for ever bless him!

The vile Sir Hargrave, as the servant understood, was wounded. Sir Charles it seems was also hurt. Thank God it was so slightly, as not to hinder him from pursuing his journey to town after the glorious act.

I will speed this away by Richard Fennell. I will soon send you farther particulars by the post: Not unhappy ones, I hope.

Ever Yours,

ARCHIBALD REEVES.

Mr. LEEVES, to GEORGE SELBY, Esq.

Dear Sir, Sat. Feb. 18.

I am just returned from visiting my beloved cousin. You will be glad of every minute particular, as I can give it to you, relating to this shocking affair; and to her protector and his sister. There are not such another brother and sister in England.

I got to the hospitable mansion by nine this morning. I enquired after Miss Biron's health; and, on giving in my name, was shewn into a handsome parlour, elegantly furnished.

Immediately came down to me a very agreable young Lady; Miss Grandison I gave her a thousand thanks for the honour of her Letter, and the joyful information it had given me of the safety of one so deservedly dear to us.

She must be an excellent young Lady, answered she. I have just left her — You must not see her yet —

Ah, madam, ſaid I, and looked ſurpriſed and grieved, I believe —

Don't affright yourſelf, Sir. Miſs Byron will do very well. But ſhe muſt be kept quiet. She has had a happy deliverance — She —

O madam, interrupted I, your generous, your noble brother —

Is the beſt of men, Mr. Reeves: His delight is in doing good. — And, as to this adventure, it has made him, I am ſure, a very happy man.

But is my couſin, madam, ſo ill, that I cannot be allowed to ſee her for one moment?

She is but juſt come out of a fit. She fell into it in the relation ſhe would have made of her ſtory, on mentioning the villain's name by whom ſhe has ſuffered. She could give only broken and imperfect accounts of herſelf all day yeſterday, or you had heard from me ſooner. When you ſee her, you muſt be very cautious of what you ſay to her. We have a ſkilful phyſician, by whoſe adviſe we proceed.

God for ever bleſs you, madam!

He has not long left her. He adviſes quiet. She has had a very bad night. Could ſhe compoſe herſelf, could ſhe get a little natural reſt, the cure is performed. Have you breakfaſted, Sir?

Breakfaſted, madam! My impatience to ſee my couſin allowed me not to think of breakfaſt.

You muſt breakfaſt with me, Sir. And when that is over, if ſhe is tolerable, we will acquaint her with your arrival, and go up together. I read your impatience, Sir: We will make but a very ſhort breakfaſting. I was juſt going to breakfaſt.

She rang. It was brought in.

I longed, I ſaid, as we ſat at tea, to be acquainted with the particulars of the happy deliverance.

We avoid aſking any queſtions that may affect her. I know very little of the particulars myſelf. My brother was in haſte to get to town. The ſervants that were with him at the time, hardly diſmounted: He doubted not but the Lady (to whom he referred me for the gratifying my curioſity) would be able to tell me every-thing. But ſhe fell into fits, and, as I told you, was ſo ill, on the recollection of what ſhe had ſuffered —

Good

Good God! ſaid I, what muſt the dear creature have ſuffered!

— That we thought fit to reſtrain our curioſity, and ſo muſt you, till we ſee Sir Charles. I expect him before noon.

I am told, madam, that there was a ſkirmiſh. I hope Sir Charles —

I hope ſo too, Mr. Reeves, interrupted ſhe. I long to ſee my brother as much as you can do to ſee your couſin — But on my apprehenſions, he aſſured me upon his honour, that he was but very ſlightly hurt. Sir Charles is no qualifier, Sir, when he ſtakes his honour, be the occaſion either light or ſerious.

I ſaid, I doubted not but ſhe was very much ſurpriſed at a Lady's being brought in by Sir Charles, and in a dreſs ſo fantaſtic.

I was, Sir. I had not left my chamber: But haſtened down at the firſt word, to receive and welcome the ſtranger. My maid, out of breath, burſt into my room — Sir Charles, madam, beſeeches you this moment to come down. He has ſaved a Lady from robbers (that was her report) a very fine Lady! and is come back with her. He begs that you will come down this inſtant.

I was too much ſurpriſed at my brother's unexpected return, and too much affected with the Lady's viſible grief and terror, to attend to her dreſs, when I firſt went down. She was ſitting, dreadfully trembling, and Sir Charles next her, in a very tender manner, aſſuring her of his and of his ſiſter's kindeſt protection. I ſaluted her, continued the Lady: Welcome, welcome, thrice welcome to this houſe, and to me —

She threw herſelf on one knee to me. Diſtreſs had too much humbled her. Sir Charles and I raiſed her to her ſeat. You ſee before you, madam, ſaid ſhe, a ſtrange creature; and looked at her dreſs. Think not hardly, Sir, turning to Sir Charles, her hand claſped and held up, of her whom you have ſo generouſly delivered. Think not hardly of me, madam, turning to me: I am not a bad creature. That vile man! — She could ſay no more.

Charlotte, ſaid my brother, you will make it your firſt care to raiſe the ſpirits of this injured beauty: Your next, to take her directions, and inform her friends of her ſafety.

She wiſhed to be conveyed to town, but looking at her dreſs, I offered her cloaths of mine; and my brother ſaid, if ſhe were very earneſt, and thought herſelf able to go, he

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0101
DFG

would take horſe, and leave the chariot, and he was ſure that I would attend her thither.

But before ſhe could declare her acceptance of this offer, as ſhe ſeemed joyfully ready to do, her ſpirits failed her, and ſhe ſunk down at my feet.

Sir Charles juſt ſtaid to ſee her come to herſelf; and then — Siſter, ſaid he, the Lady cannot be removed. Let Dr. Holmes be ſent for inſtantly. I know you will give her your beſt attendance. I will be with you before noon to morrow. The Lady is too low, and too weak, to be troubled with queſtions now. Johnſon will be back from Windſor. Let him take her commands to any of her friends. Adieu, dear madam — (Your couſin, Sir, ſeemed likely to faint again) Support yourſelf. Repeating, You are in ſafe and honourable hands; bowing to her, as ſhe bowed in return, but ſpoke not — Adieu, Charlotte: And away went the beſt of brothers.

And God Almighty bleſs him, ſaid I, where-ever he goes!

Miſs Grandiſon then told me, that the houſe I was in belonged to the Earl of L. who had lately married her elder ſiſter: About three months ago, they ſet out, ſhe ſaid, to pay a viſit to my Lord's eſtate and relations in Scotland, for the firſt time, and to ſettle ſome affairs there: They were expected back in a week or fortnight: She came down but laſt Tueſday, and that in order to give directions for every-thing to be prepared for their reception. It was happy for your couſin, ſaid ſhe, that I obtained the favour of my brother's company; and that he was obliged to be in town this morning. He intended to come back to carry me to town this evening. We are a family of love, Mr. Reeves. We are true brothers and ſiſters — But why do I trouble you with theſe things now? We ſhall be better acquainted. I am charmed with Miſs Byron.

She was ſo good as to hurry the breakfaſt; and when it was over, conducted me up ſtairs. She bit me ſtay at the door, and ſtept gently to the bed-ſide, and opening the curtain, I heard the voice of our couſin.

Dear madam, what trouble do I give! were her words.

Still talk of trouble, Miſs Byron! anſwered Miſs Grandiſon, with an amiable familiarity; you will not forbear — Will you promiſe me not to be ſurpriſed at the arrival of your couſin Reeves?

I do promiſe — I ſhall rejoice to ſee him.

Miſs Grandiſon called to me. I approached, and catching my couſi's held-out hand, Thank God, thank God, beſt beloved of an hundred hearts! ſaid I, that once more I behold you! that once more I ſee you in ſafe and honourable hands! — I will not tell you what we have all ſuffered.

No, don't, ſaid ſhe — You need not — But, O my couſin! I have fallen into the company of angels.

Forbear, gently patting her hand, forbear theſe high flights, ſaid the kind Lady, or I ſhall beat my charming patient. I ſhall not think you in a way to be quite well, till you deſcend.

She whiſpered me, that the doctor had expreſſed fears for her head, if ſhe were not kept quiet. Then raiſing her voice, Your couſin's gratitude, Mr. Reeves, is exceſſive. You muſt allow me, ſmiling, to beat her. When ſhe is well, ſhe ſhall talk of angels, and of what ſhe pleaſes.

She then aſked me, if I had let her friends in the country know of this ſhocking affair?

I had ſuſpected Mr. Greville, I ſaid; and had written in confidence to her uncle Selby —

O my poor grandmamma — O my good aunt Selby, and my Lucy — I hope —

Miſs Grandiſon interpoſed, humorouſly interrupting — I will have nothing ſaid that begins with O. Indeed, Miſs Byron, Mr. Reeves, I will not truſt you together — Cannot you have patience —

We both aſked her pardon. My couſin deſired leave to riſe — But theſe odious cloaths, ſaid ſhe —

If you are well enough, child, replied Miſs Grandiſon, you ſhall riſe, and have no need to ſee thoſe odious cloaths, as you call them. I told them Mrs. Reeves had ſent her ſome of her cloaths. The portmanteau was ordered to be brought up.

Then Miſs Grandiſon, ſitting down on the bed by my couſin, took her hand; and, feeling her pulſe, Are you ſure, my patient, that you ſhall not ſuffer if you are permitted to riſe? Will you be calm, ſerene, eaſy? Will you baniſh curioſity? Will you endeavour to avoid recollection?

I will do my endeavour, anſwered my couſin.

Miſs Grandiſon then rung, and a maid-ſervant coming up, Jenny, ſaid ſhe, pray give your beſt aſſiſtance to my lovely patient. But be ſure don't let her hurry her ſpirits, I will lead Mr Reeves into my dreſſing-room. And when you are dreſſed, my dear, we will either return to you here, or expect you to join us there, at your pleaſure.

And then ſhe obligingly conducted me into her dreſſing-room; and excuſed herſelf for refuſing to let us talk of intereſting ſubjects. I am rejoiced, ſaid ſhe, to find her more ſedate and compoſed than hitherto ſhe has been. Her head has been greatly in danger. Her talk, for ſome hours, when ſhe did talk, was ſo wild and incoherent, and ſhe was ſo full of terror, on every one's coming in her ſight, that I would not ſuffer any-body to attend her but myſelf.

Let me tell you, Mr. Reeves, I am as curious as you can be, to know the whole of what has befallen her. But her heart is tender and delicate. Her ſpirits are low; and we muſt not pull down with one hand, what we build up with the other: My brother alſo will expect a good account of my charge.

I bleſſed her for her goodneſs. And finding her deſirous of knowing all that I could tell her, of our couſin's character, family, and lovers, I gave her a brief hiſtory, which extremely pleaſed her. Good God! ſaid ſhe, what a happineſs is it, that ſuch a Lady, in ſuch a diſtreſs, ſhould meet with a man as excellent, and as much admired, as herſelf! My brother, Mr. Reeves, can never marry but he muſt break half a ſcore hearts. Forgive me, that I bring him in, whenever any good perſon, or thing, or action, is ſpoken of. Every-body, I believe, who is ſtrongly poſſeſſed of a ſubject, makes everything ſeen, heard, or read of, that bears the leaſt reſemblance, turn into and illuſtrate that ſubject.

But here I will conclude this Letter, in order to ſend it by the poſt. Beſides, I have been to much fatigued in body and mind, and my wife has alſo been ſo much diſturbed in her mind, that I muſt give way to a call of reſt.

If our couſin has a good day to-morrow, and no return of her fits, ſhe propoſes to be in town on Monday. I am to wait on her, and Sir Charles and his ſiſter, at breakfaſt on Monday morning, and to attend her home; where there will be joy indeed, on her arrival.

Pray receive for yourſelf, and make for me to your Lady, and all friends, my compliments of congratulation.

I have not had either leiſure or inclination to enquire after the villain, who has given us all this diſturbance.

Saturday Night. Ever, ever yours,
ARCHIBALD REEVES.

From Mr. REEVES, to GEORGE SELBY, Eſq;
In Continuation.

Miſs Grandiſon went to my couſin, to ſee how ſhe bore riſing, ſuppoſing her near dreſſed.

She ſoon returned to me. The moſt charming woman, I think, ſaid ſhe, I ever ſaw! But ſhe trembles ſo, that I have perſuaded her to lie down. I anſwered for you, that you would ſtay dinner.

I muſt beg excuſe, madam. I have an excellent wife. She loves Miſs Byron as her life: She will be impatient to know —

Well, well, well, ſay no more, Mr. Reeves: My brother has redeemed one priſoner, and his ſiſter has taken another: And glad you may be, that it is no worſe.

I bowed, and looked ſilly, I believe.

You may look, and beg and pray, Mr. Reeves. When you know me better, you'll find me a very whimſicall creature: But you muſt ſtay to ſee Sir Charles. Would you go home to your wife with half your errand? She won't thank you for that, I can tell you, let her be as good a woman as the beſt. But, to comfort you, we give not into every modern faſhion. We dine earlier, than moſt people of our condition. My brother, tho' in the main above ſingularity, will, nevertheleſs, in things he thinks right, be govern'd by his own rules, which are the laws of reaſon and convenience. You are on horſeback; and, were I you, ſuch good news as I ſhould have to carry, conſidering what might have happened, would give me wings, and make me fly thro' the air with it.

I was equally delighted and ſurpriſed at her humorous raillery; but could not anſwer a ſingle word. If it be midnight before you will ſuffer me to depart, thought I, I will not make another objection.

While this amiable Lady was thus entertaining me, we heard the trampling of horſes — My brother! ſaid ſhe, I hope! — He comes! pardon the fondneſs of a ſiſter, who ſpeaks from ſenſible effects — A father and brother in one!

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0105
DFG

Sir Charles entered the room. He addreſſed himſelf to me in a moſt polite manner. Mr Reeves! ſaid he, as I underſtand from below — Then turning to his ſiſter. Excuſe me, Charlotte. I heard this worthy gentleman was with you: And I was impatient to know how my fair gueſt —.

Miſs Byron is in a good way, I hope, interrupted ſhe, but very weak and low-ſpirited. She aroſe and dreſſed; but I have prevailed on her to lie down again.

Then turning to me, with a noble air, he both welcomed and congratulated me.

Sir Charles Grandiſon is indeed a fine figure. He is in the bloom of youth. I don't know that I have ever ſeen an handſomer or genteeler man. Well might his ſiſter ſay, that if he married, he would break half a ſcore hearts. O this vile Pollexfen! thought I, at the moment; Could he draw upon, has he hurt, ſuch a man as this?

After pouring out my acknowledgements, in the name of ſeveral families, as well as in my own, I could not but enquire into the nature of the hurt he had received.

A very trifle! — My coat only was hurt, Mr. Reeves. The ſkin of my left ſhoulder raked a little, putting his hand upon it.

Thank God, ſaid I: Thank God, ſaid Miſs Grandiſon — But ſo near! — O the villain! what might it have been! —

Sir Hargrave, pent up in a chariot, had great diſadvantage. My reflexions on the event of yeſterday, yield me the more pleaſure, as I have, on enquiry, underſtood that he will do well again, if he will be ruled. I would not, on any account, have had his inſtant death to anſwer for. But no more of this juſt now. Give me the particulars of the young Lady's ſtate of health. I left her in a very bad way. — You had advice?

Miſs Grandiſon gave her brother an account of all that had been done; and of every-thing that had paſſed ſince he went away; as alſo of the character and excellencies of the Lady whom he had reſcued.

I confirmed what ſhe ſaid in my couſin's favour; and he very gratefully thanked his ſiſter for her care, as a man would do for one the neareſt and deareſt to him.

We then beſought him to give an account of the glorious action, which had reſtored to all that knew her, the darling of our hearts.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0106
DFG

I will relate all he ſaid, in the firſt perſon, as nearly in his own words as poſſible; and will try to hit the coolneſs with which he told the agreable ſtory.

"You know, ſiſter, ſaid he, the call I had to town. It "was happy, that I yielded to your importunity to attend "you hither.

"About two miles on this ſide Hounſlow, I ſaw a chariot-"and-ſix driving at a great rate. I alſo had ordered Jerry to "drive pretty faſt.

"The coachman ſeemed inclined to diſpute the way with "mine. This occaſioned a few moments ſtop to both. I "ordered my coachman to break the way. I don't love to "ſtand upon trifles. My horſes were freſh. I had not "come far.

"The curtain of the chariot we met was pulled down. I "ſaw not who was in it. But on turning out of the way, "I knew by the arms it was Sir Hargrave Pollexfen's.

"There was in it a gentleman, who immediately pulled up "the canvas.

"I ſaw, however, before he drew it up, another perſon, "wrapt up in a man's ſcarlet cloak.

"For God's ſake! help, help! cried out the perſon: For "Gods ſake! help!

"I ordered my coachman to ſtop.

"Drive on, ſaid the gentleman; curſing his coachman: "Drive on when I bid you.

"Help! again cried ſhe, but with a voice as if her mouth "was half ſtopt.

"I called to my ſervants on horſeback to ſtop the poſtillion "of the other chariot. And I bid Sir Hargrave's coachman "proceed at his peril.

"Sir Hargrave called out on the contrary ſide of the chariot "(his canvas being ſtill up on that next me) with vehement "execrations to drive on.

"I alighted, and went round to the other ſide of the "chariot.

"Again the Lady endeavoured to cry out. I ſaw Sir Har-"grave ſtruggle to pull over her mouth an handkerchief, "which was tied round her head. He ſwore outrageouſly.

"The moment ſhe beheld me, ſhe ſpread out both her "hands — For God's ſake —

Sir Hargrave Pollexfen, ſaid I, by the arms. — You are "engaged, I doubt, in a very bad affair.

"I

"I am Sir Hargrave Pollexfen; and am carrying a fugitive "wife — Your own wife, Sir Hargrave!

"Yes, by G —, ſaid he; and ſhe was going to elope from "me at a damned Maſquerade — See! drawing aſide the cloak, "detected in the very dreſs!

"O no, no, no! ſaid the Lady —

"Proceed, coachman, ſaid he, and curſed and ſwore —

"Let me aſk the Lady a queſtion, Sir Hargrave.

"You are impertinent, Sir. Who the devil are you?

"Are you, madam, Lady Pollexfen? ſaid I.

"O no! no! no! — was all ſhe could ſay —

"Two of my ſervants came about me; a third held the "head of the horſe on which the poſtillion ſat. Three of Sir "Hargrave's approached on their horſes, but ſeemed as if "afraid to come too near, and parleyed together.

"Have an eye to thoſe fellows, ſaid I. Some baſe work is "on foot. You'll preſently be aided by paſſengers. Sirrah, "ſaid I to the coachman (for he laſhed the horſes on) proceed "at your peril.

"Sir Hargrave then, with violent curſes and threatenings, "ordered him to drive over every one that oppoſed him.

"Coachman, proceed at your peril, ſaid I. Madam will "you —

"O Sir, Sir, Sir, relieve, help me for God's ſake! I am in "a villain's hands! Tricked, vilely tricked, into a villain's "hands. Help, help, for God's ſake!

"Do you, ſaid I, to Frederick, cut the traces, if you cannot "otherwiſe ſtop this chariot. Bid Jerry cut the reins; and "then ſeize as many of thoſe fellows as you can. Leave Sir "Hargrave to me.

"The Lady continued ſcreaming and crying out for help.

"Sir Hargrave drew his ſword, which he had held between "his knees in the ſcabbard; and then called upon his ſervants "to fire at all that oppoſed his progreſs.

"My ſervants, Sir Hargrave, have fire-arms as well as yours. "They will not diſpute my orders. Don't provoke me to "give the word.

"Then addreſſing the Lady, Will you, madam, put yourſelf "into my protection?

"O yes, yes, yes, with my whole heart — Dear good Sir, "protect me!

"I opened the chariot-door. Sir Hargrave made a paſs at "me. Take that, and be damned to you, for your inſolence, "ſcoundrel! ſaid he. "I

"I was aware of his thruſt, and put it by; but his ſword a "little raked my ſhoulder.

"My ſword was in my hand, but undrawn.

"The chariot-door remaining open (I was not ſo ceremo- "nious, as to let down the foot-ſtep to take the gentleman "out) I ſeized him by the collar before he could recover "himſelf from the paſs he had made at me; and with a jerk, "and a kind of twiſt, laid him under the hind-wheel of his "chariot.

"I wrenched his ſword from him, and ſnapped it, and "flung the two pieces over my head.

"His coachman cried out for his maſter. Mine threatened "his if he ſtirred. The poſtillion was a boy. My ſervant "had made him diſmount, before he joined the other two, "whom I had ordered aloud to endeavour to ſeize (but my "view was only to terrify) wretches, who, knowing the "badneſs of their cauſe, were before terrified.

"Sir Hargrave's mouth and face were very bloody. I "believe I might hurt him with the pummel of my ſword.

"One of his legs, in his ſprawling, had got between the "ſpokes of his chariot-wheel. I thought that was a fortunate "circumſtance for preventing further miſchief; and charged "his coachman not to ſtir with the chariot for his maſter's "ſake.

"He cried out, curs'd, and ſwore. I believe he was bruiſed "with the fall. The jerk was violent. So little able to "ſupport an offence, Sir Hargrave, upon his own principles, "ſhould not have been ſo ready to give it.

"I had not drawn my ſword: I hope I never ſhall be "provoked to do it in a private quarrel. I ſhould not "however, have ſcrupled to draw it, on ſuch an occaſion as "this, had there been an abſolute neceſſity for it.

"The Lady, though greatly terrified, had diſengaged herſelf "from the man's cloak. I had not leiſure to conſider her "dreſs; but I was ſtruck with her figure, and more with her "terror.

"I offered my hand. I thought not now of the foot-ſtep, "any more than I did before: She not of any-thing, as it "ſeemed, but her deliverance.

"I carried the lovely creature round Sir Hargrave's horſes, "and ſeated her in my chariot — Be aſſured, madam, ſaid "I, that you are in honourable hands. I will convey you to "my ſiſter, who is a young Lady of honour and virtue.

"She

"She look'd out at one window, then at the orther, in "viſible terror, as if fearing ſtill Sir Hargrave. Fear nothing, "ſaid I: I will attend you in a moment. I ſhut the chariot-"door.

"I then went backward a few paces (keeping, however, "the Lady in my eye) to ſee what had become of my "ſervants.

"It ſeems, that at their firſt coming up pretty near with Sir "Hargrave's horſemen, they preſented their piſtols.

"What ſhall we do, Wilkins, or Wilſon, or ſomeſuch name, "ſaid one of Sir Hargrave's men to another, all three of them "on their defence? Fly for it, anſwered the fellow. We "may ſwing for this. I ſee our maſter down. There may "be murder.

"Their conſciences put them to flight.

"My ſervants purſued them a little way; but were "returning to ſupport their maſter, juſt as I had put the "Lady into my chariot.

"I ſaw Sir Hargrave at a diſtance, on his legs, ſupported "by his coachman. He limped; leaned his whole weight "upon his ſervant; and ſeemed to bee in agonies.

"I bid one of my ſervants tell him who I was.

"He curſed me, and threatened vengeance. He curſed my "ſervant; and ſtill more outrageouſly his own ſcoundrels, as "he called them.

"I then ſtept back to my chariot.

"Miſs Byron had, thro' terror, ſunk down at the bottom "of it; where ſhe lay panting, and could only ſay, on my "approach, Save me! Save me!

"I re-aſſured her. I lifted her on the ſeat; and brought "her to my ſiſter. And what followed, I ſuppoſe, Charlotte, "bowing to her, you have told Mr. Reeves.

We were both about to break out in grateful applauſes; but Sir Charles, as if deſigning to hinder us, proceeded.

"You ſee, Mr. Reeves, what an eaſy conqueſt this was. "You ſee what a ſmall degree of merit falls to my ſhare. "The violator's conſcience was againſt him. The conſciences "of his fellows were on my ſide. My own ſervants are honeſt "worthy men. They love their maſter. In a good cauſe I "would ſet any three of them againſt ſix who were engaged "in a bad one. Vice is the greateſt coward in the world, "when is knows it will be reſolutely oppoſed. And what "have good men, engaged in a right cauſe, to fear?

What

What an admirable man is Sir Charles Grandiſon! — Thus thinking! Thus acting!

I explained to Sir Charles who this Wilſon was, whom the others conſulted, and were directed by; and what an implement in this black tranſaction.

To what other man's protection in the world, Mr. Selby, could our kinſwoman have been obliged, and ſo little miſchief followed?

Sir Hargrave, it ſeems, returned back to town. What a recreant figure, my dear Mr. Selby, muſt he make, even to himſelf! — A villain!

I long to have Miſs Byron's account of this horrid affair. — God grant, that it may not be ſuch a one, as will lay us under a neceſſity — But as our couſin has a great notion of female delicacy — I know not what I would ſay — We muſt have patience a little while longer.

Miſs Grandiſon's eyes ſhone with pleaſure all the time her brother was giving his relation.

I can only ſay, my brother, ſaid ſhe, when he had done, that you have reſcued an angel of a woman; and you have made me as happy by it, as yourſelf.

I have a generous ſiſter, Mr. Reeves, ſaid Sir Charles.

Till I knew my brother, Mr. Reeves, as I now know him, I was an inconſiderate, unreflecting girl. Good and evil which immediately affected not myſelf, were almoſt alike indifferent to me. But he has awakened in me a capacity to enjoy the true pleaſure that ariſes from a benevolent action.

Depreciate not, my Charlotte, your own worth. Abſence, Mr. Reeves, endears. I have been long abroad. Not much above a year returned: But when you know us better, you will find I have a partial ſiſter.

Mr. Reeves will not then think me ſo. But I will go and ſee how my fair patient does.

She went accordingly to my couſin.

O Sir Charles, ſaid I, what an admirable woman is Miſs Grandiſon!

My ſiſter Charlotte, Mr. Reeves, is indeed, an excellent woman. I think myſelf happy in her. But I tell her ſometimes, that I have ſtill a more excellent ſiſter. And it is no ſmal inſtance of Charlotte's greatneſs of mind, that ſhe herſelf will allow me to ſay ſo.

Juſt then came in the Ladies The two charming creatures entered together, Miſs Grandiſon ſupporting my trembling couſin:

couſin: But ſhe had firſt acquainted her, that ſhe would find Sir Charles in her dreſſing-room.

She looked indeed lovely, tho' wan, at her firſt entrance: But a fine glow overſpread her cheeks, at the ſight of her deliverer.

Sir Charles approached her, with an air of calmneſs and ſerenity, for fear of giving her emotion. She caſt her eyes upon him, with a look of the moſt reſpectful gratitude.

I will not oppreſs my fair gueſt with many words: But permit me to congratulate you, as I hope I may, on your recovered ſpirits — Allow me, madam —

And he took her almoſt motionleſs hand, and conducted her to an eaſy chair that had been ſet for her. She ſat down, and would have ſaid ſomething; but only bowed to Sir Charles, to Miſs Grandiſon, and me; and reclined her head againſt the cheek of the chair.

Miſs Grandiſon held her ſalts to her.

She took them into her own hands, and ſmelling to them, raiſed her head a little: Forgive me, madam! Pardon me, Sir! — O my couſin, to me — How can I — So oppreſſed with obligations! — Such goodneſs! —

And then ſhe again reclined her head, as giving up hopeleſly the effort ſhe made to expreſs her gratitude.

You muſt not, madam, ſaid Sir Charles, ſitting down by her, over-rate a common benefit — Dear Miſs Byron (Permit me to addreſs myſelf to you, as of long acquaintance) by what Mr. Reeves has told my ſiſter, and both have told me, I muſt think yeſterday one of the happieſt days of my life. I am ſorry that our acquaintance has begun ſo much at your coſt: But you muſt let us turn this evil appearance into real good. I have two ſiſters: The world produces not moore worthy women. Let me henceforth boaſt that I have three: And ſhall I not then have reaſon to rejoice in the event that has made ſo lovely an addition to my family?

Then taking her paſſive hand with the tenderneſs of a truly affectionate brother, conſoling a ſiſter in calamity, and taking his ſiſter's, and joining both; Shall I not, madam, preſent my Charlotte to a ſiſter? And will you not permit me to claim as a brother under that relation? — Our Miſs Byron's Chriſtian name, Mr. Reeves?

Harriet, Sir.

My ſiſter Harriet, receive and acknowledge your Charlotte. My Charlotte —

Miſs

Miſs Grandiſon aroſe and ſaluted my couſin; who looked at Sir Charles with reverence, as well as gratitude; at Miſs Grandiſon with delight; and at me with eyes lifted up. And, after a little ſtruggle for ſpeech; How ſhall I bear this goodneſs! ſaid ſhe — This indeed is bringing good out of evil! — Dit I not ſay, my couſin, that I was fallen into the company of angels?

I was afraid ſhe would have fainted.

We muſt endeavour, Mr. Reeves, ſaid Sir Charles to me, to leſſen the ſenſe our Miſs Byron has of her paſt danger, in order to bring down to reaſonable limits the notion ſhe has of her obligation for a common relief.

Miſs Grandiſon ordered a few drops on ſugar. — You muſt be orderly, my ſiſter Harriet, ſaid ſhe. Am I not your elder ſiſter? My elder ſiſter makes me do what ſhe pleaſes.

Oh! madam! ſaid my couſin —

Call me not madam; call me your Charlotte. My brother has given me and himſelf a ſiſter; — Will you not own me?

My lips and my heart, I will be ſo bold as to ſay, ever went together: But how — And yet ſo ſweetly invited, My — My — My Charlotte (withdrawing her hand from Sir Charles, and claſping both her arms round Miſs Grandiſon's neck, take your Harriet, perſon and mind — May I be found worthy, on proof, of all this goodneſs!

✕

I ſtayed to dine with this amiable brother and ſiſter. My couſin exerted herſelf, to go down, and ſat at table for one half-hour: But changing countenance, once or twice, as ſhe ſat, Miſs Grandiſon would attend her up, and make her lie down. I took leave of her, at her quitting the table.

On Monday I hope to ſee her once more among us.

If our dear Miſs Byron cannot write, you will perhaps have one Letter more, my dear Mr. Selby, from

Your ever-affectionate

ARCHIBALD REEVES.

Mr. REEVES. In Continuation.

Monday Night, Feb. 20.

I will write one more Letter, my dear couſin Selby, and then I will give up my pen to our beloved couſin.

I got to Colnebrooke by nine this morning. I had the pleaſure to find our Miſs Byron recovered beyond my hopes.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0113
DFG

She had a very good night on Saturday; and all Sunday, ſhe ſaid, was a cordial day to her from morning till night; and her night was quiet and happy.

Miſs Grandiſon ſtaid at home yeſterday to keep my couſin company. Sir Charles paſſed the greateſt part of the day in the library. The two Ladies were hardly ever ſeparated. My couſin expreſſes herſelf in raptures whenever ſhe ſpeaks of this brother an ſiſter. Miſs Grandiſon, ſhe ſays (and indeed every one muſt ſee it) is one of the frankeſt and moſt communicative of women. Sir Charles appears to be one of the moſt unſevered of men, as well as one of the moſt polite. He makes not his gueſt uneaſy with his civilities: But you ſee freedom and eaſe in his whole deportment; and the ſtranger cannot doubt but Sir Charles will be equally pleaſed with freedom and eaſe, in return. I had an encouraging proof of the juſtneſs of this obſervation this morning from him, as we ſat at breakfaſt. I had expreſſed myſelf, occaſionally, in ſuch a manner, as ſhewed more reſpect than freedom: My dear Mr. Reeves, ſaid he, like minds will be intimate ad firſt ſight. Receive me early into the liſt of your friends; I have already numbered you among mine. I ſhould think amiſs of myſelf, if ſo good a man as I am aſſured Mr. Reeves is, ſhould by his diſtance ſhew a diffidence of me, that would not permit his mind to mingle with mine.

Miſs Grandiſon, my couſin ſays, put her on relating to her, her whole hiſtory; and the hiſtories of the ſeveral perſons and families to whom ſhe is related.

Miſs Byron concluding as well as I, that Sir Charles would rather take his place in the coach than go on horſeback to town; and being ſo happily recovered, as not to give us apprehenſon about her bearing tolerably the little journey; I kept my horſe in our return, and Sir Charles went in the coach. This motion coming from Miſs Byron, I raillied her upon it when I got her home: But ſhe won't forgive me, if ſhe knows that I told you, whoſe the motion was. And yet the dear creature's eyes ſparkled with pleaſure when ſhe had carried her point.

I was at home near half an hour before the coach arrived; and was a welcome gueſt.

My dear Mrs. Reeves told me ſhe had expected our arrival before dinner, and hoped Sir Charles and his ſiſter would dine with us. I hoped ſo too, I told her.

I found there Lady Betty and Miſs Clements, a favourite of us all, both impatiently waiting to ſee my couſin.

Don't be jealous, Mr. Reeves ſaid my wife, if after what I have heard of Sir Charles Grandiſon, and what he has done for us, I run to him which open arms.

I give you leave, my dear, to love him, replied I; and to expreſs your Love in what manner you pleaſe.

I have no doubt, ſaid Lady Betty, that I ſhall break my heart, if Sir Charles takes not very particular notice of me.

He ſhall have my prayers as well as my praiſes, ſaid Miſs Clements.

She is acquainted with the whole ſhocking affair.

When the coach ſtopt, and the bell rung, the ſervants contended who ſhould firſt run to the door I welcomed them at the coach. Sir Charles handed out Miſs Byron, I Miſs Grandiſon: Sally, ſaid my couſin, to her raptured maid, take care of Mrs Jenny.

Sir Charles was received by Mrs. Reeves, as I expected. She was almoſt ſpeechleſs with joy. He ſaluted her: But I think, as I tell her, the firſt motion was hers. He was then obliged to go round; and my couſin, I do aſſure you, looked as if ſhe would not wiſh to have been neglected.

As ſoon as the Ladies could ſpeak, they poured out their bleſſings and thanks to him, and to Miſs Grandiſon; whom, with a moſt engaging air, he preſented to each Lady; and ſhe, as engagingly, ſaluted her ſiſter Harriet by that tender relation, and congratulated them, and Miſs Byron, and herſelf, upon it; kindly beſpeaking a family relation for herſelf, thro' her dear Miſs Byron, were her words.

When we were ſeated, my wife and Lady Betty wanted to enter into the particulars of the happy deliverance, in praiſe of the deliverer: But Sir Charles interrupting them, My dear Mrs. Reeves, ſaid he, you cannot be too careful of this jewel. Every-think may be truſted to her own diſcretion; but how can we well blame the man who would turn thief for ſo rich a treaſure? I do aſſure you, my ſiſter Harriet (Do you know, Mrs. Reeves, that I have found my third ſiſter? that if Sir Hargrave will repent, I will forgive him for the ſake of the temptation.

Mrs. Reeves was pleaſed with this addreſs, and has talked of it ſince.

I never can forgive him, Sir, ſaid Miſs Byron, were it but —

That he has laid you under such an obligation, said Miss Grandison, patting her hand with her fan, as she sat over-against her: But hush, child! You said that before! — And then turning to Mrs. Reeves. Has not our new-found sister a very proud heart, Mrs. Reeves?

And, dearest Miss Grandison, replied my smiling, delighted cousin, did you not ask that question before?

I did, child, I did, but not of Mrs. Reeves. — A compromise, however — Do you talk no more of obligation, and I'll talk no more of pride.

Charlotte justly chides her Harriet, said Sir Charles. What must the man have been that had declined his aid in a distress so alarming? Not one word more therefore upon this subject.

We were all disappointed, that this amiable brother and sister excused themselves from dining with us. All I mean of our own family; for Lady Betty and Miss Clements, not being able to stay, were glad they did not.

They took leave, amidst a thousand grateful blessings and acknowledgements; Miss Grandison promising to see her sister Harriet very soon again; and kindly renewing her wishes of intimacy.

When they went away, There goes your heart, Miss Byron, said Mrs. Reeves.

True, answered Miss Byron, if my heart have no place in it for any-thing but gratitude, as I believe it has not.

Miss Grandison, added she, is the most agreeable of women —

And Sir Charles, rejoined Mrs. Reeves, archly, is the most dis-agreeable of men.

Forbear, cousin, replied Miss Byron, and blushed.

Well, well, said Lady Betty, you need not, my dear, be ashamed, if it be so.

Indeed you need not, joined in Miss Clements; I never saw a finer man in my life. Such a Lover, if one might have him —

If, if — replied Miss Byron — But till if is out of the question, should there not be such a thing as discretion, Miss Clements?

No doubt of it, returned that young Lady; and if it be to be shewn by any woman on earth, where there is such a man as this in the question, and in such circumstances, it must be by Miss Byron.

Miss Byron was not so thoroughly recovered, but that her spirits began to flag. We made her retire, and at her request excused her coming down to dinner.

I told you I had accepted of the offer made by Lady Betty, when we were in dreadful uncertainty, that her ſteward ſhould make further enquiries about the people at Paddington. Nothing worth mentioning has occurred from thoſe enquiries; except confirming, that the widow and her daugthers are not people of bad characters. In all likelihood they thought they ſhould entitle themſelves to the thanks of all Miſs Byron's friends, when the marriage was completed with a man of Sir Hargrave's fortune.

This vile wretch, I hear, keeps his room; and it is whiſpered that he is more than half-crazed; inſomuch that his very attendants are afraid to go near him. We know not the nature of his hurt; but hurt he is, tho' in a fair way of recovery. He threatens, it ſeems, deſtruction to Sir Charles the moment he is able to go abroad. God preſerve one of the worthieſt and beſt of men!

Sir Hargrave has turned off all the ſervants, we are told, that attended him on his ſhocking but happily-diſappointed enterprize.

Miſs Byron intends to write to her Lucy by tomorrow's poſt (if ſhe continue mending) an ample account of all that ſhe ſuffered from the date of her laſt Letter, to the hour of her happy deliverance.

Sir Rowland — But let my couſin write to you upon that and other matters. She knows what to ſay on that ſubject better than I do.

Mean time I heartily congratulate every one of the dear family upon the return and ſafety of the darling of ſo many hearts; and remain, dear Mr. Selby,

Your moſt faithful and obedient Servant,
ARCHIBALD REEVES.

Miſs BYRON, to Miſs SELBY.

Monday, Feb. 20.

Is it again given me to write to you, my Lucy! and in you, to all my revered friends! To write with chearfulneſs! To call upon you all to rejoice with me! — God be praiſed!

What dangers have I eſcaped! How have my head and my heart been affected! I dare not, as yet, think of the anguiſh you all endured for me.

With what wretched levity dit I conclude my laſt Letter! Giddy creature, that I was, vain and fooliſh!

But let me begin my ſad ſtory. Your impatience all this while muſt be too painful. Only let me premiſe, that gaily as I boaſted, when I wrote to you ſo conceitedly, as it might ſeem, of my dreſs, and of conqueſts, and I know not what nonſenſe, I took no pleaſure at the place, in the ſhoals o fools that ſwam after me. I deſpiſed myſelf and them. Deſpiſed! was ſhocked at both.

Two Lucifers were among them: But the worſt, the very worſt Lucifer of all, appeared in a Harlequin dreſs. He hopped and ſkipt, and played the fool about me; and at laſt told me, He knew Miſs Byron; and that he was, as he called himſelf, the diſpiſed, the rejected, Sir Hargrave Pollexfen.

He behaved, however, with complaiſance; and I had no apprehenſion of what I was to ſuffer from his villainy.

Mr. Reeves has told you, that he ſaw me into the chair provided for me by my vile new ſervant.

Mr. Reeves has told you every-thing about the chair, and the chairmen. How can I deſcribe the miſgivings of my heart when I firſt began to ſuſpect treachery! But when I undrew the curtains, and found myſelf further deluded by another falſe heart, whoſe help I implored, and in the midſt of fields, and ſoon after the lights put out, I pierced the night air with my ſcreams, till I could ſcream no more. I was taken out in fits: And when I came a little to my ſenſes, I found myſelf on a bed, three women about me, one at my head, holding a bottle to my noſe, my noſtrils ſore with hartſhorn, and a ſtrong ſmell of burnt feathers; but no man near me.

Where am I? Who are you, madam? And who are you? Where am I? Where the queſtions I firſt aſked.

The women were a mother and two daughters. The mother anſwered, You are not in bad hands.

God grant you ſay truth! ſaid I.

No harm is intended you; only to make you one of the happieſt of women. We would not be concerned in a bad action

I hope not: I hope not: Let me engage your pity, madam. You ſeem to be a mother. Theſe young gentlewomen, I preſume, are your daughters. Save me from ruin; I beſeech you, madam: Save me from ruin, as you would your daughters.

Theſe young women are my daughters. They are ſober and modeſt women. No ruin is intended you. One of the richeſt richeſt and nobleſt men in England is your admirer. He dies for you. He aſſures me that he intends honourable marriage to you. You are not engaged, he ſays: And you muſt and you ſhall be his. You may ſave murder, madam, if you conſent. He reſolves to be the death of any Lover whom you encourage.

This muſt be the vile contrivance of Sir Hargrave Pollexfen, immediately cried I out: Is it not? Is it not? Tell me; I beg of you to tell me.

I aroſe, and ſat on the bed-ſide; and at that moment in came the vile, vile Sir Hargrave.

I ſcreamed out. He threw himſelf at my feet. I reclined my head on the boſom of the elderly perſon, and by hartſhorn and water they had much ado to keep me out of a fit. Had he not withdrawn; had he kept in my ſight; I ſhould certainly have fainted. But holding up my head, and ſeeing only the women, I revived: And began to pray, to beg, to offer rewards, if they would facilitate my eſcape; or procure my ſafety: But then came in again the hated man.

I beg of you, Miſs Byron, ſaid he, with an air of greater haughtineſs than before, to make yourſelf eaſy, and hear what I have to ſay. It is in your own choice, in your own power, to be what you pleaſe, and to make me what you plaſe. Do not therefore needleſly terrify yourſelf. You ſee I am a determined man. Ladies, you may withdraw —

Not and leave me here! — And as they went out, I puſhed by the mother, and between the daughters, and followed the foremoſt into the parlour; and then ſunk down on my knees, wrapping my arms about her: O ſave me! ſave me! ſaid I.

The vile wretch entered. I left her, and kneeled to him. I knew not what I did. I remember, I ſaid, wringing my hands, If you have mercy; If you have compaſſion; let me now, now, I beſeech you, Sir, this moment, experience your mercy.

He gave them ſome motion, I ſuppoſe, to withdraw (for by that time the widow and the other daughter were in the parlour;) and they all three retired.

I have beſought you, madam, and on my knees too, to ſhew me mercy; but none would you ſhew me, inexorable Miſs Byron! Kneel, if you will; in your turn kneel, ſupplicate, pray; you cannot be more in earneſt, than I was. Now are the tables turned.

Barbarous man! said I, rising from my knees. My spirit was raised: But it as instantly subsided I beseech you, Sir Hargrave, in a quite frantic way, wringing my hands, and coming near him and then running to the window, and then to the door (without meaning to go out at either, had they been open; for whither could I go?) and then again to him; Be not, I beseech you, Sir Hargrave, cruel to me. I never was cruel to any-body. You know I was civil to you; I was very civil —

Yes, yes, and very determined. You called me no names. I call you none, Miss Byron. You were very civil. Hitherto I have not been uncivil. But remember, madam — I don't hit your fancy, madam!

Can you be a malicious man, Sir Hargrave?

You don't like my morals, madam!

And is this the way, Sir Hargrave, are these the means you take, to convince me that I ought to like them?

Well, madam, you shall prove the mercy in me you would not shew. You shall see that I cannot be a malicious man; a revengeful man: And yet you have raised my pride. You shall find me a moral man.

Then, Sir Hargrave, will I bless you from the bottom of my heart!

But you know what will justify me in every eye for the steps I have taken. Be mine, madam. Be legally mine. I offer you my honest hand. Consent to be Lady Pollexfen—. No punishment, I hope — Or, take the consequence.

What, Sir! justify by so poor, so very poor a compliance, steps that you have so basely taken! — Take my life, Sir: But my hand and my heart are my own: They never shall be separated.

I arose from my knees, trembling; and threw myself upon the window-seat, and wept bitterly.

He came to me. I looked on this side and on that, wishing to avoid him.

You cannot fly, madam. You are securely mine: And mine still more securely you shall be. Don't provoke me: Don't make me desperate. By all that's Good and Holy —

He cast his eyes at my feet; then at my face; then threw himself at my feet, and embraced my knees with his odious arms.

I was terrified. I screamed. In ran one of the daughters— Good Sir! Pray, Sir! — Did you not say you would be honourable?

Her

Her mother followed her in — Sir, Sir! In my houſe —

Thank God, thought I, the people here are better than I had reaſon to apprehend they were. But, O my Lucy, they ſeemed to believe, that marriage would make amends for every outrage.

Here let me conclude this Letter. I have a great deal more to ſay.

Miſs BYRON. In Continuation.

What a plague, ſaid the wretch to the women, do you come in for? I thought you knew your own Sex better than to mind a woman's ſqualling. They are always ready, ſaid the odious fellow, to put us in mind of the occaſion we ought to give them for crying out. I have not offered the leaſt rudeneſs —

I hope not, Sir. I hope my houſe — So ſweet a creature —

Dear bleſſed, bleſſed woman (frantic with terror, and mingled joy, to find myſelf in better hands than I expected— Standing up, and then ſitting down, I believe at every ſentence) Protect me! Save me! Be my advocate! Indeed I have not deſerved this treacherous treatment. Sir Hargrave may have better and richer wives than I: Pray prevail upon him to ſpare me to my friends, for their ſake. I will forgive him for all he has done.

Nay, dear Lady, if Sir Hargrave will make you his lawful and true wife, there can be no harm done, ſurely.

I will, I will, Mrs. Awberry, ſaid he. I have promiſed, and I will perform. But if ſhe ſtand in her own light — She expects nothing from my morals — If ſhe ſtand in her own light; and looked fiercely —

God protect me! ſaid I; God protect me!

The gentleman is without, Sir, ſaid the woman. O how my heart at that moment ſeemed to be at my throat! What gentleman! thought I: Some one come to ſave me!— O no!—

And inſtantly entered the moſt horrible-looking clergyman that I ever beheld

This, as near as I can recollect, is his deſcription — A vaſt tall, big-boned, ſplay footed man. A ſhabby gown; as ſhabby a wig; an huge red pimply face; and a noſe that hid half of it, when he looked on one ſide, and he ſeldom looked fore-right when I ſaw him. He had a dog's-eared common-prayer book in his hand, which once had been gilt; opened, horrid ſight! at the page of matrimony!

Yet I was ſo intent upon making a friend, when a man, a clergyman, appeared, that I heeded not, at his entrance, his frightful viſage, as I did afterwards. I puſhed by Sir Hargrave, turning him half round with my vehemence, and made Mrs. Awberry totter; and throwing myſelf at the clergyman's feet, Man of God, ſaid I, my hands claſped, and held up; Gentleman! Worthy man! — A good clergyman muſt be all this! — If ever you had children! ſave a poor creature! — Save me from violence! Give not your aid to ſanctify a baſe action.

The man ſnuffled his anſwer through his noſe. He ſquinted upon me, and took my claſped hands, which were buried in his huge hand: Riſe, madam! Kneel not to me! No harm is intended you. One queſtion, only: Who is that gentleman before me, in the ſilver-laced cloaths? What is his name?

He is Sir Hargrave Pollexfen, Sir: A wicked, a very wicked man, for all he looks ſo!

The vile wretch ſtood ſmiling, and enjoying my diſtreſs.

O madam! A very hon-our-able man! bowing, like a ſycophant, to Sir Hargrave.

And who pray, madam, are you? What is your name?

Harriet Byron, Sir: A poor innocent creature, (looking at my dreſs) though I make ſuch a vile appearance — Good Sir, your pity! And I ſunk down again at his feet.

Of Northamptonſhire, madam? You are a ſingle woman! Your uncle's name!

Is Selby, Sir. A very good man — I will reward you, Sir, as the moſt grateful heart —

All is fair: All is above-board: All is as it was repreſented. I am above bribes, madam. You will be the happieſt of women before day-break — Good people! — The three women advanced.

Then I ſaw what an ugly wreth he was!

Sir Hargrave advanced. The two horrid creatures raiſed me between them. Sir Hargrave took my ſtruggling hand: And then I ſaw another ill-looking man enter the room, who I ſuppoſe was to give me to the hated man.

Dearly beloved, began to read the ſnuffling monſter —

O my Lucy! Does not your heart ake for your Harriet? Mine has ſeemed to turn over and over, round and round.

I don't know how, at the recital.—It was ready to choak me at the time.

I muſt break off for a few minutes.

Miſs BYRON. In Continuation.

I was again like one frantic. Read no more! ſaid I; and in my phrenſy, daſhed the book out of the miniſter's hand, if a miniſter he was. I beg your pardon, Sir, ſaid I; but you muſt read no further. I am baſely betrayed hither. I cannot, I will not, be his.

Proceed, proceed, ſaid Sir Hargrave, taking my hand by force; virago as ſhe is, I will own her for my wife—Are you the gentle, the civil Miſs Byron, madam? looking ſneeringly in my face.

Alas! my Lucy, I was no virago: I was in a perfect phrenſy: But it was not an unhappy phrenſy; ſince in all probability it kept me from falling into fits; and fits, the villain had ſaid, ſhould not ſave me.

Dearly beloved, again ſnuffled the wretch. O my Lucy! I ſhall never love theſe words. How may odious circumſtances invert the force of the kindeſt words! Sir Hargrave ſtill detained my ſtruggling hand.

I ſtamped, and threw myſelf to the length of my arm, as he held my hand. No dearly beloved's, ſaid I. I was juſt beſide myſelf. What to ſay, what to do, I knew not.

The cruel wretch laughed at me; No dearly beloved's! repeated he: Very comical, faith! and laughed again: But proceed, proceed, doctor.

We are gathered together here in the ſight of God, read he on.

This affected me ſtill more. I adjure you, Sir, to the miniſter, by that God in whoſe ſight, you read, we are gathered together, that you proceed no further. I adjure you, Sir Hargrave, in the ſame tremendous Name, that you ſtop further proceedings. My life take: With all my heart, take my life: But my hand never, never, will I join with yours.

Proceed, doctor: Doctor, pray proceed, ſaid the vile Sir Hargrave.

The man who ſtood aloof (the ſlieſt, ſodden-faced creature I ever ſaw) came nearer — To the queſtion, doctor, and to my part, if you pleaſe! — Am not I her father? — To the queſtion, doctor, if you pleaſe! — The gentlewomen will prepare her for what is to follow.

O thou man! Of heart the moſt obdurate and vile! And will ye, looking at every perſon, one hand held up (for ſtill the vile man griped the other quite benumbed hand in his iron paw) and adjuring each, Will ye ſee this violence done to a poor young creature? — A ſoul, gentlewomen, you may have to anſwer for. I can die. Never, never, will I be his.

Let us women talk to the Lady by ourſelves, Sir Hargrave. Pray your honour, let us talk to her by ourſelves.

Ay, ay, ay, ſaid the parſon, by all means: Let the Ladies talk to one another, Sir. She may be brought to conſider.

He let go my hand. The widow took it. And was leading me out of the room — Not up ſtairs, I hope, madam, ſaid I.

You ſhan't then, ſaid ſhe. Come, Sally; come, Deb; let us women go out together.

They led me into a little room adjoining to the parlour: And then, my ſpirits ſubſiding, I thought I ſhould have fainted away. I had more hartſhorn and water poured down my throat.

When they had brought me a little to myſelf, they pleaded with me Sir Hargrave's great eſtate. —What are riches to me? They cannot purchaſe peace of mind: I want not riches.

They pleaded his honourable Love — I my invincible Averſion.

He was a handſome man — The moſt odious in my eyes of the human ſpecies. Never, never, ſhould my conſent be had to ſanctify ſuch a baſeneſs.

My danger! And that they ſhould not be able to ſave me from worſe treatment —

How! — Not able! — Ladies, madam, is not this your own houſe? Cannot you raiſe a neighbourhood? Have you no neighbours? A thouſand pounds will I order to be paid into your hands for a preſent before the week is out; I pledge my honour for the payment; if you will but ſave me from a violence, that no worthy woman can ſee offered to a diſtreſſed young creature! — A thouſand pounds! — Dear Ladies! Only to ſave me, and ſee me ſafe to my friends!

The wretches in the next room, no doubt, heard all that paſſed. In at that moment came Sir Hargrave: Mrs. Awberry, ſaid he, with a viſage ſwelled with malice, young Ladies, we keep you up; we diſturb you. Pray retire to your own reſt:

reſt: Leave me to talk with this perverſe woman. She is mine.

Pray, Sir Hargrave, ſaid Mrs. Awberry —

Leave her to me, I ſay: — Miſs Byron, you ſhall be mine. Your Grevilles, madam, your Fenwicks, your Ormers, when they know the pains and the expence I have been at, to ſecure you, ſhall confeſs me their ſuperior — Shall confeſs —

In wickedneſs, in cruelty, Sir, you are every man's ſuperior.

You talk of cruelty, Miſs Byron! triumphing over ſcores of proſtrate Lovers, madam! You remember your treatment of me, madam! kneeling, like an abject wretch, at your feet! Kneeling for pity! But no pity could touch your heart, madam! — Ungrateful, proud girl! — Yet am I not humbling you: Take notice of that: I am not humbling you: I am propoſing to exalt you, madam.

Vile, vile, debaſement! ſaid I.

Madam, pray, madam, ſaid the widow to me, conſider what you are about, and whom you refuſe. Can you have a handſomer man? Can you have a man of a greater fortune? Sir Hargrave means nothing but what is honourable. You are in his power —

In his power, madam! returned I: I am in yours. You are miſtreſs of this houſe. I claim the protection of it. Have you not neighbours? Your protection I put myſelf under. Then claſping my arms about her, Lock me up from him till you can have help to ſecure to you the privilege of your own houſe; and deliver me ſafe to my friends, and I will ſhare my fortune with your two daughters.

The wicked man took the mother and youngeſt daughter each by her hand, after he had diſengaged the former from my claſping arms, and led them to the door. The elder followed them of her own accord. They none of them ſtruggled againſt going. I begged, prayed, beſought them not to go; and, when they did, would have thruſt myſelf out with them. But the wretch, in ſhutting them out, ſqueezed me dreadfully, as I was half in, half out; and my noſe guſhed out with blood.

I ſcreamed: He ſeemed frighted: But inſtantly recovering myſelf — So, ſo, you have done your worſt! — You have killed me, I hope. I was out of breath, my ſtomach was very much preſſed, and one of my arms was bruiſed. I have the marks ſtill; for he clapt to the door with violence, not

not knowing, to do him juſtice, that I was ſo forward in the door-way.

I was in dreadful pain. I talked half wildly, I remember. I threw myſelf in a chair — So, ſo, you have killed me, I hope — Well, now I hope, now I hope, you are ſatisfied. Now may you moan over the poor creature you have deſtroyed: For he expreſſed great tenderneſs and conſternation; and I, for my part, felt ſuch pains in my boſom, that having never felt ſuch before, I really thought I was bruiſed to death: Repeating my fooliſh So, ſo. — But I forgive you, ſaid I — Only, Sir, call to the gentlewomen, Sir — Retire, Sir, Let me have my own Sex only about me. My head ſwam; my eyes failed me; and I fainted quite away.

Miſs BYRON. In Continuation.

I underſtood afterwards that he was in the moſt dreadful conſternation. He had faſtened the door upon me and himſelf; and for a few moments was not enough preſent to himſelf to open it. Yet crying out upon his God to have mercy upon him, and running about the room, the women haſtily rapped at the door. Then he ran to it, opened it, curſed himſelf, and beſought them to recover me, if poſſible.

They ſaid I had death in my face: They lamented over me: My noſe had done bleeding: But, careful of his own ſafety in the midſt of his terror, he took my bloody handkerchief; if I did not recover, he ſaid, that ſhould not appear againſt him; and he haſten'd into the next room, and thruſt it into the fire; by which were ſitting, it ſeems, the miniſter and his helper, over ſome burnt brandy.

O gentlemen! cried the wretch, nothing can be done to night. Take this; and gave them money. The Lady is in a fit. I wiſh you well home.

The younger daughter reported this to me afterwards, and what follows: They had deſired the maid, it ſeems, to bring them more firing, and a jug of ale; and they would ſit in the chimney-corner, they ſaid, till peep of day: But the ſame young woman who was taken off from her errand, to aſſiſt me, finding me, as they all thought, not likely to recover, ran in to them, and declared, that the Lady was dead, certainly dead; and what, ſaid ſhe, will become of us all? This terrified the two men. They ſaid, It was then time for them to be gone. Accordingly, taking each of them another dram, they ſnatched up their hats and ſticks, and away they hurried; hoping, the doctor doctor ſaid, that, as they were innocent, and only meant to ſerve the gentleman, their names, whatever happened, would not be called in queſtion.

When I came a little to myſelf, I found the three women only with me. I was in a cold ſweat, all over ſhivering. There was no fire in that room: They led me into the parlour, which the two men had quitted; and ſat me down in an elbow chair; for I could hardly ſtand, or ſupport myſelf; and chafed my temples with Hungary-water.

The mother and elder ſiſter left me ſoon after, and went to Sir Hargrave. I can only gueſs at the reſult of their deliberations by what followed.

The younger ſiſter, with compaſſionate frankneſs, anſwered all my queſtions, and let me know all the above particulars. Yet ſhe wonder'd that I could refuſe ſo handſome and ſo rich a man as Sir Hargrave.

We were broken in upon, as I was intending to aſk more queſtions when the elder ſiſter called out the younger: And inſtantly came in Sir Hargrave.

He took a chair, and ſat down by me, one leg thrown over thee knee of the other; his elbow upon that knee, and his hand ſupporting his bow'd-down head; biting his lips; looking at me, then from me, then at me again, five or ſix times, as in malice.

At laſt I broke ſilence. I tought I would be as mild as I could, and not provoke him to do me further miſchief. Well have you done, Sir Hargrave, to commit ſuch a violence upon a poor young creature that never did nor thought you evil!

I pauſed. He was ſilent.

What diſtraction have you given to my poor couſin Reeves! How my heart bleeds for them!

I ſtopt. He was ſtill ſilent.

I hope, Sir, you are ſorry for the miſchief you have done me; and for the pain you have given to my friends! — I hope, Sir —

Curſed! ſaid he.

I ſtopt, thinking he would go on: But he ſaid no more; only changing his poſture; and then reſuming it.

Theſe people, Sir, ſeem to be honeſt people. I hope you deſigned only to terrify me. Your bringing me into no worſe company is an aſſurance to me that you meant better, than —

Devils all! interrupted he —

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0127
DFG

I thought he was going on; but he grinned, ſhook his head, and then again reclined it upon his hand.

I forgive you, Sir, the pain you have given me. — But my friends — As ſoon as day breaks (and I hope that is not far off) I will get the women to let my couſin Reeves —

Then up he ſtarted — Miſs Byron, ſaid he, you are a woman; a true woman — And held up his hand, clenched. In knew not what to think of his intention.

Miſs Byron, proceeded he, after a pauſe, you are the moſt conſummate hypocrite that I ever knew in my life: And yet I thought that the beſt of you all could fall into fits and ſwoonings whenever you pleaſed.

I was now ſilent. I trembled.

Damned fool! aſs! blockhead! woman's fool! — I could curſe myſelf for ſending away de parſon. I thought I had known ſomething of womens tricks — But yet your arts, your hypocriſy, ſhall not ſerve you, madam. What I failed in here, ſhall be done elſewhere.

I wept. I could not then ſpeak.

Can't you go into fits again? Can't you? ſaid the barbarian.

God deliver me, prayed I to myſelf, from the hands of this madman!

I aroſe, and as the candle ſtood near the glaſs, I ſaw in it my vile figure, in this abominable habit, to which, till then, I had paid little attention. O how ſcorned I myſelf!

Pray, Sir Hargrave, ſaid I, let me beg that you will not terrify me further. I will forgive you for all you have hitherto done, and place it to my own account, as a proper puniſhment for conſenting to be thus marked for a vain and fooliſh creature. Your abuſe, Sir, give me leave to ſay, is low and unmanly: But in the light of a puniſhment I will own it to be all deſerved: And let here my puniſhment end, and I will thank you, and forgive you with my whole heart.

Your fate is determined, Miſs Byron.

Juſt then came in a ſervant-maid with a capuchin, who whiſpered ſomething to him: To which he anſwered, That's well —

He took the capuchin; the maid withdrew; and approached me with it. I ſtarted, trembled, and was ready to faint. I caught hold of the back of the elbow chair.

Your fate is determined, madam, repeated the ſavage — Here, put this on — Now fall into fits again — Put this on!

Pray, Sir Hargrave —

And

And pray, Miſs Byron: What has not been completed here, ſhall be completed in a ſafer place; and that in my own way— Put this on, I tell you. Your compliance may yet befriend you.

Where are the gentlewomen? — Where are — Gone to reſt, madam — John, Frank, called he out.

In came two men-ſervants.

Pray, Sir Hargrave — Lord protect me — Pray, Sir Hargrave — Where are the gentlewomen? — Lord protect me!

Then runing to the door, againſt which one of the men ſtood — Man, ſtand out of the way, ſaid I. But he did not. He only bowed.

I called as loud as my fears would let me.

At laſt came in the elder ſiſter — O madam! good young gentlewomen! I am glad you are come, ſaid I.

And ſo am I, ſaid the wicked man. — Pray, Miſs Sally, put on this Lady's capuchin.

Lord bleſs me, for why? for what? I have no capuchin!

I would not permit her to put it on, as ſhe would have done.

The ſavage then wrapt his arms about mine, and made me ſo very ſenſible by his force, of the pain I had had by the ſqueeze of the door, that I could not help crying out. The young woman put on the capuchin whether I would or not.

Now, Miſs Byron, ſaid he, make yourſelf eaſy; or command a fit, it is all one! My end will be better ſerved by the latter. — Miſs Sally, give orders.

She ran out with the candle. Frank, give me the cloak, ſaid Sir Hargrave.

The fellow had a red cloak on his arm. His barbarous maſter took it from him. To your poſts, ſaid he.

The two men withdrew in haſte. Now, my deareſt life, ſaid he, with an air of inſult, as I thought, you command your fate, if you are eaſy.

He threw the cloak about me.

I begged, prayed, would have kneeled to him: But all was in vain: The tyger-hearted man, muffled me up in it, and by force carried me thro' a long entry to the foredoor. There was ready a chariot-and-ſix; and that Sally was at the door with a lighted candle.

I called out to her. I called out for her mother; for the other ſiſter. I beſought him to let me ſay but ſix words to the widow.

But no widow was to appear; no younger ſiſter: She was perhaps more tender-hearted than the elder: And in ſpite of all my ſtruggles, prayers, reſiſtance, he lifted me into the chariot.

Men on horſeback were about it. I thought that Wilſon was one of them; and ſo it proved. Sir Hargrave ſaid to that fellow. You know what tale to tell, if you meet with impertinents. And in he came himſelf.

I ſcreamed. Scream on, my dear, upbraidingly ſaid he; and barbarouſly mocked me, imitating, low wretch! the bleating of a ſheep (Could you not have killed him for this, my Lucy?) Then rearing himſelf up, Now am I Lord of Miſs Byron! exulted he.

Still I ſcreamed for help; and he put his hand before my mouth, tho' vowing honour, and ſuch ſort of ſtuff; and, with his unmanly roughneſs, made me bite my lip. And away laſhed the coachman with your poor Harriet.

Miſs BYRON. In Continuation.

As the chariot drove by houſes, I cried out for help once or twice, at ſetting out. But under pretence of preventing my taking cold, he tied an handkerchief over my face, head, and mouth, having firſt muffled me up in the cloack; preſſing againſt my arm with his whole weight, ſo that I had not my hands at liberty. And when he had done, he ſeized them, and held them both in his left hand, while his right-arm thrown round me, kept me faſt on the ſeat. And except that now-and-then my ſtruggling head gave me a little opening, I was blinded.

But at one place on the road, juſt after I ſcreamed, and made another effort to get my hands free, I heard voices, and immediately the chariot ſtopt. Then how my heart was filled with hope! But, alas! it was but momentary. I heard one of his men ſay (that Wilſon I believe) The beſt of huſbands, I aſſure you, Sir; and ſhe is the worſt of wives.

I ſcreamed again. Ay, ſcream and be d—n'd, I heard ſaid in a ſtranger's voice, if that be the caſe. Poor gentleman! I pity him with all my heart. And immediately the coachman drove on again.

The vile wretch laughed; That's you, my dear, and hugged me round. You are the d—n'd wife. And again he laughed: By my ſoul I am a charming contriver!

I

I was ready to faint ſeveral times I begged for air: And when we were in an open road, and I ſuppoſe there was nobody in ſight, he vouchſafed to pull down the blinding handkerchief, but kept it over my mouth; ſo that except now-and-then, that I ſtruggled it aſide with my head I could only make a murmuring kind of noiſe.

The curtain of the fore-glaſs was pulled down, and generally the canvas on both ſides drawn up. But I was ſure to be made acquainted when we came near houſes, by his care again to blind and ſtifle me up.

A little before we were met by my deliverer, I had, by getting one hand free, unmuffled myſelf ſo far as to ſee (as I had gueſſed once or twice before by the ſtone pavements) that we were going thro' a town; and then I again vehemently ſcreamed. But he had the cruelty to thruſt an handkerchief into my mouth, ſo that I was almoſt ſtrangled; and my mouth was hurt, and is ſtill ſore, with that and his former violence of the like nature.

Indeed, he now-and-then made apologies for the cruelty, to which, he ſaid, he was compelled, by my invincible obſtinacy, to have recourſe. I was ſorely hurt, he ſaid, to be the wife of a man of his conſideration!

At one place the chariot drove out of the road, over rough ways, and little hillocks, as I thought by its rocking; and then, it ſtopping, he let go my hands, and endeavoured to ſooth me. He begged I would be pacified, and offered, if I would forbear crying out for help, to leave my eyes unmuffled all the reſt of the way. But I would not, I told him, give ſuch a ſanction to his barbarous violence

On the chariot's ſtopping, one of his men came up, and put an handkerchief into his maſter's hands, in which were ſome cakes and ſweet-meats; and gave him alſo a bottle of ſack, with a glaſs. Sir Hargrave was very urgent with me to take ſome of the ſweet meats, and to drink a glaſs of the wine: But I had neither ſtomach nor will to touch either.

He eat himſelf very cordially God forgive me, I wiſhed in my heart, there were pins and needles in every bit he put in his mouth.

He drank two glaſſes of the wine. Again he urged me. I ſaid, I hoped, I had eat and drank my laſt.

The chariot had not many minutes got into the great road again, over the like rough and ſometimes plaſhy ground, when it ſtopt on a diſpute between the coachman, and the coachman of another chariot-and-ſix, as it proved.

Sir Hargrave had but juſt drawn my handkerchief cloſer to my eyes, when this happened. Hinder not my tears from flowing, ſaid I; ſtruggling to keep my eyes free, the cloak enough muffling me, and the handkerchief being over my mouth; ſo that my voice could be but juſt heard by him, as I imagine.

He looked out of his chariot, to ſee the occaſion of this ſtop; and then I found means to diſengage one hand.

I heard a gentleman's voice directing his own coachman to give way.

I then puſhed up the handkerchief with my diſengaged hand, from my mouth, and pulled it down from over my eyes, and cried out for help: Help, for God's ſake.

A man's voice (it was my deliverer's, as it happily proved) bid Sir Hargrave's coachman proceed at his peril.

Sir Hargrave, with terrible oaths and curſes, ordered him to proceed, and to drive thro' all oppoſition.

The gentleman called Sir Hargrave by his name; and charged him with being upon a bad deſign.

The vile wretch ſaid, he had only ſecured a runaway wife, eloped to, and intending to elope from, a maſquerade, to her adulterer: He put aſide the cloak, and appealed to my dreſs.

I cried out, No, no, no, five or ſix times repeated; but could ſay no more at that inſtant, holding up then both my diſengaged hands for protection.

The wicked man endeavoured to muffle me up again, and to force the handkerchief, which I had then got under my chin, over my mouth; and brutally curſed me.

The gentleman would not be ſatisfied with Sir Hargrave's ſtory. He would ſpeak to me. Sir Hargrave called him impertinent, and other names, and aſked, Who the devil he was? with rage and contempt. — The gentleman, however, aſked me, and with an air that promiſed deliverance, if I were Sir Hargrave's wife.

No, no, no, no, — I could only ſay.

But you may better conceive, than I can expreſs, the terror I was in, when Sir Hargrave drew his ſword, and puſhed at the gentleman with ſuch words as denoted (for I could not look that way) he had done him miſchief. But when I found my oppreſſor, pulled out of the chariot, by the brave, the gallant man (which was done with ſuch force, as made the chariot rock) and my protector safe; I was as near fainting with joy, as before I had been with terror. I had shaken off the cloak, and untied the handkerchief.

chariot

He carried me in his arms (I could not walk) to his own chariot.

I heard Sir Hargrave curse, swear, and threaten. I was glad, however, he was not dead.

Mind him not, madam, fear him not, said Sir Charles Grandison (You know his noble name, my Lucy!) Coachman, drive not over your master: Take care of your master; or some such words he said, as he lifted me into his own chariot. He came not in, but shut the chariot-door, as soon as he had seated me.

He just surveyed, as it were, the spot, and bid a servant let Sir Hargrave know who he was; and then came back to me.

Partly thro' terror, partly thro' weakness, I had sunk to the bottom of the chariot. He opened the door, entered, and, with all the tenderness of a brother, soothed me, and lifted me on the seat once more. He ordered his coachman to drive back to Colnebrooke. In accents of kindness, he told me, that he had there at present the most virtuous and prudent of sisters, to whose care he would commit me, and then proceed on his journey to town.

How irresistibly welcome to me was his supporting arm, thrown round me, as we flew back, compared to that of the vile Sir Hargrave!

Mr. Reeves has given you an account, from the angelic sister — O my Lucy, they are a pair of angels!

I have written a long, long Letter, or rather five Letters in one, of my distresses, of my deliverance: And, when my heart is stronger, I will say more of the persons, as well as minds, of this excellent brother and his sister.

But what shall I do with my gratitude? O my dear, I am overwhelmed with my gratitude? I can only express it in silence before them. Every look, if it be honest to my heart, however, tells it: Reverence mingles with my gratitude — Yet there is so much ease, so much sweetness, in the behaviour of both — O my Lucy! Did I not find that my veneration of both is equal; did I not, on examination, find, that the amiable sister is as dear to me, from her experienced tenderness, as her brother from his remembered bravery, in short, that I love the sister, and revere the brother; I should be afraid of my gratitude.

I have over-written myself. I am tired. O my grandmamma, you have never yet, while I have been in London, sent me your ever-valued blessing under your own hand: Yet, I am sure I had it; and your blessings, my dear uncle and aunt Selby; and your prayers, my Lucy, my Nancy, and all my Loves; else my deliverance had not perhaps followed my presumptuous folly, in going dressed out, like the fantastic wretch I appeared to be, at a vile, a foolish masquerade. — How often, throughout the several stages of my distress, and even in my deliverance, did I turn my eye to myself, and from myself, with the disgust that made a part, and that not a light one, of my punishment!

Pray let not any-body unnecessarily be acquainted with this shocking affair; particularly neither Mr Greville, nor Mr. Fenwick. It is very probable, that they (especially Mr. Greville) would be for challenging Sir Hargrave, were it only on a supposition that it would give him an interest in me in the eye of the world. You know that Mr. Greville watches for all opportunities to give himself consequence with me.

Were any farther mischief to happen to any-body, I should be grieved beyond measure Hitherto I have reason to think, that a transaction so shocking is not very unhappily concluded. May the vile man sit himself down satisfied, and I shall be willing to do so too; provided I never more behold his face.

✕

Mr. Reeves will send you with the above pacquet, a Letter from Sir Charles Grandison, inclosing one from that vile Wilson. I can write no more just now, and they will sufficiently explain themselves.

Adieu, my dearest Lucy. I need not say how much I am, and will ever be.

Your faithful and affectionate

HARRIET BYRON.

Sir CHA. GRANDISON, to ARCHIB. REEVES, Esq;

Dear Sir, Canterbury, Febr. 22.

The inclosed long Letter is just now brought to me. I pretend not to judge of the writer's penitence. Yet his confessions seem ingenuous; and he was not under any obligation to put them on paper.

As

As I presume that you will not think it adviseable to make the ineffectual attempt upon Miss Byron public by a prosecution, perhaps your condescending to let the man's sister know, that her brother, if in earnest, may securely pursue the honest purposes he mentions, may save the poor wretch from taking such courses as might be fatal, not only to himself, but to innocent persons, who otherwise may suffer by his being made desperate.

The man, as you will see by his letter, if you had not a still stronger proof, has abilities to do mischief. He has been in bad hands, as he tells us, from his youth upwards, or he might have been an useful member of society. He is a young man; and if yet he could be made so, his reformation will take from the number of the profligate, and add to that of the hopeful; and who knows how wide the circle of his acquaintance is, and how many of them may be influenced by his example either way? If he marry the not-dishonest young woman, to whom he seems to be contracted, may not your lenity be a means of securing a whole future family on the side of moral honesty?

His crime, as the attempt was frustrated, is not capital: And, not to mention the service of such an evidence as this, should Sir Hargrave seek for a legal redress, as he sometimes weakly threatens, my hope makes me see a further good that may be brought about by this man's reformation: Wicked masters cannot execute their base views upon the persons of the innocent, without the assistance of wicked servants. What a nest of vipers may be crushed at once, or, at least, rendered unhurtful, by depriving the three monsters he names of the aid of such an agent? Men who want to save appearances, and have estates to forfeit, will sometimes be honest of necessity, rather than put themselves into the power of untried villains.

You will be so good as to make my compliments to your Lady, and to our lovely ward. You see, Sir, that I join myself with you in the honour of that agreeable relation.

I hope the dear Lady has perfectly recovered her health and spirits. I am, good Mr. Reeves.

Your most faithful and obedient Servant,

CHARLES GRANDISON.

To the Honourable Sir, CHARLES GRANDISON, Bart.

Saturday, Feb. 18.

In what an odious light muſt that wretch appear before the worthieſt of men, who cannot but abhor himſelf!

I am the unhappy man who was hired into the ſervice of the beſt of young Ladies! Whom I was the means of betraying into the power of Sir Hargrave Pollexfen, from the Ball in the Hay-market on Thurſday night laſt.

Your honour has made yourſelf an intereſt in Miſs Byron's fate, as I may ſay, by your powerful protection. Pardon me if I give you ſome account of myſelf, and of tranſactions which perhaps will otherwiſe never be known: And this in juſtice to all round.

My parentage was honeſt: My education was above my parentage I ſet out with good principles: But I fell into a bad ſervice. I was young, and of a good natural diſpoſition; but had not virtue enough to reſiſt a temptation: I could not ſay No, to an unlawful thing, when my principals commanded my aſſent.

I was, at firſt ſetting out, by favour of friends, taken as clerk to a merchant. In proceſs of time I tranſacted his buſineſs at the Cuſtom-houſe. He taught me to make light of oaths of office; and this by degrees made me think light of all moral obligations, and laid the foundation of my ruin.

My maſter's name was Bagenhall. He died; and I was to ſeek. His brother ſucceeded to his fortune, which was very large: He was brought up to no buſineſs: He was a gentleman: His ſeat is near Reading.

He employed me in mean offices, till his pander died (he is a very profligate man, Sir!); and then he promoted me to a ſtill meaner.

In this way, I grew a ſhameleſs contriver. He introduced me to Sir Hargrave Pollexfen, and to Mr. Merceda, a Portugueſe Jew. In the ſervice of theſe three maſters, good heaven forgive me! what villainies was I not the means of perpetrating! Yet I never was ſo hardened, but I had temporary remorſes. But theſe three gentlemen would never let me reſt from wickedneſs: Yet they kept me poor and neceſſitous, as the only means to keep me what they called honeſt; for they had often reaſon to think, that had I had any other means of ſubſiſtence, I would have been really honeſt.

I

I was now Mr. Bagenhall's conſtant ſervant. Sir Hargrave and Mr. Merceda uſed to borrow me: But I muſt ſay Sir Hargrave is an innocent man to the other two. They careſſed me, I ſpeak it to my ſhame, as a man fit for their turn. I had contrivance; temper; I knew ſomething of everybody. But my ſiſter knows my frequent compunctions; and that I hated the vile courſe I was in. She uſed to lecture me enough. She is a good woman.

Will your honour have patience with me a little longer?

Sir Hargrave on the ſeventh of this month came to my maſter Bagenhall at Reading, with whom he had double buſineſs: One was to take a bond and judgment of him (Sir Hargrave is no better than an uſurer:) Mr. Bagenhall has lived a moſt extravagant life: The other was to borrow me. Mr. Merceda had a ſcheme on foot at the ſame time, which he was earneſt to engage me in; but it was too ſhocking; and Mr. Bagenhall came into Sir Hargrave's.

Sir Hargrave told them, he deſigned nothing more than a violation, if he could get my aſſiſtance, of the moſt beautiful woman in the world. And, Sir, to ſee the villainy of the other two; they both, unknown to each other, made propoſals to me, to trick Sir Hargrave, and to get the Lady, each for himſelf.

But to me, Sir Hargrave ſwore, that he was fully reſolved to leave this wicked courſe of life. Bagenhall and Merceda, he ſaid, were devils; and he would marry, and have no more to ſay to them. All that was in his view was honeſt marriage. He ſaid he had never been in the Lady's company but once, and that was the day before at Lady Betty Williams's. He ſaid he went thither, knowing ſhe was to be there; for having for ſome time had it in his head to marry, this was the Lady he had pitched upon in his mind, from the character he had of her from every mouth at the Northampton races.

Now, ſaid he, I ſhall have ſome difficulty to obtain her, notwithſtanding my fortune is ſo great; for every one who ſees her is in love with her; And he named ſeveral Gentlemen who laid cloſe ſiege to her.

She brought a ſervant up with her, ſaid he, who hones after the country, and is actually gone, or ſoon will. Her couſin enquires of every one after a proper ſervant for her. You, Wilſon, ſaid he, are handſome and genteel: He was pleaſed to ſay ſo. You have a modeſt humble look: You know all the duties of a ſervant: Get yourſelf entertained, and your fortune is made for life, if by your means I obtain the Lady. I have already tendered myſelf, ſaid he. Perhaps ſhe will have me in a few days. I don't expect to be denied, if ſhe be diſengaged, as it is ſaid ſhe is. If you can get into her ſervice, you will find out every-thing. This is all that is to be done: But you muſt never mention my name, nor ever know anything of me, as I go and come.

Sir Hargrave declared, that his heart was burnt up with the Love of the Lady: And if he ſucceded you will, ſaid he, as my Lady's ſervant, be mine of courſe; you ſhall never wear a livery; and you ſhall be my gentleman, till I can get a place for you in the Cuſtoms. This, may it pleaſe your honour, he knew I had long aimed at, and it had been often promiſed by himſelf, and my other two maſters; and was their firſt promiſe when they wanted to engage me in any of their ſchemes; tho' they never thought more of it when the ſervice was over. If I got but myſelf engaged, I was, on the day I entered into my Lady's ſervice, to have as an carneſt ten guineas.

Encouraged by ſuch promiſes (and the project being an honeſter one than ever Sir Hargrave, or either of the other two, had ſought to engage me in) I offered my ſervice to my Lady; and, on Mr. Bagenhall's writing a good character of me, was accepted.

I could have been happy in the ſervice of this Lady, all the days of my life. She is all goodneſs: All the ſervants, every-body, gentle and ſimple, adored her: But ſhe, unexpectedly, refuſing to have Sir Hargrave, and he being afraid that one of her three or four Lowers would cut him out, he reſolved to take more violent meaſures than he had at firſt intended.

If any man was ever mad in Love, it was Sir Hargrave. But then he was as mad with anger to be refuſed. Sir Hargrave was ever thought to be one of the proudeſt men in England: And he complained that my Lady uſed him worſe than ſhe did any-body elſe. But it was not her way to uſe any-body ill; I ſaw that.

Nevertheleſs he was reſolved to ſtrike a bold ſtroke for a wife, as were his words from the title of a play: And between us we ſettled the matter in one night! For I had found means to get out unknown to the family.

It

It will be treſpaſſing too much upon your honour's patience, to be very particular in our contrivances. I will be as brief as poſſible.

My Lady was to go to a Maſquerade. I got into the knowledge of every thing how and about it. The maids were as full of the matter as their maſter and miſtreſſes.

It was agreed to make the chairmen fuddled. Two of Mr. Merceda's footmen were to undertake the taſk. Brandy was put into their liquor to haſten them.

They were ſoon overcome. The weather was could: They drank briſkly, and were laid up ſafe. I then hired two chance chairmen, and gave them orders as had been contrived.

I had twenty guineas given me in hand for my encouragement; in which were included the promiſed ten.

I had, when I was my firſt maſter Bagenhall's clerk, made acquaintance with ſeveral clerks of the Cuſtomhouſe, particulary with one Awberry, a ſober modeſt man; who has two ſiſters; to one of whom I am contracted, and always for two years paſt, intended to make my wife, as ſoon as I ſhould be in any way to mantain her. The mother is a widow. All of them are very honeſt people.

Mr. Awberry the brother being aſſured by me (and I was well aſſured of it myſelf, and had no doubt about it) that marriage was intended; and knowing Sir Hargrave's great eſtate (and having indeed ſeen Sir Hargrave on the occaſion, and received his proteſtations of honour) engaged his mother and ſiſters in it; and the reſult, as to them and me, was, that I was to receive, as ſoon as the knot was tied, an hundred guineas beſides the twenty; and moreover an abſolute promiſe of a place; and twenty pounds a year till I got it; and then my marriage with young Mrs. Awberry was to follow.

The widow has an annuity of thirty pounds, which, with her ſon's ſalary, keeps them above want.

She lives at Paddington. There is a back-door and garden, as it happens, convenient to bring any-body in, or carry any-body out, ſecretly; and hither it was reſolved, if poſſible, that the Lady ſhould be brought, and a Fleet parſon and his clerk ready ſtationed, to perform the ceremony.

Sir Hargrave doubted not (tho' he was fruitful in contrivances, and put many others in practice) but he ſhould be detected if he carried the Lady to his own houſe. And as he was afraid that the chairmen (notwithſtanding ſeveral other artful artful contrivances) would be able to find out the place they carried her to, he had ordered his chariot-and-ſix to be at the widow Awberry's by ſix in the morning, with three ſervants on horſeback, armed, and a horſe and piſtols beſides. After marriage he was reſolved to go to his houſe on the foreſt, but not to ſtay there; but to go to Mr. Merceda's houſe near Newberry, where he doubted not but he ſhould be ſecret till he thought fit to produce the Lady, as Lady Pollexfen: And often, very often, did he triumph on the victory he ſhould obtain over her other Lovers, and over her own proud heart, as he would have it to be.

The perſon, Sir, came: The clerk was there: But what with fits, prayers, tears, and one thing or other (at one time the Lady being thought irrecoverable; having received ſome unintended hurt in her ſtruggling to get out of a door, as I heard it was) Sir Hargrave in terror diſmiſſed the parſon; and reſolved to carry the Lady (who by that time was recovered) in the chariot to his ſeat ad Windſor; and then, ſtaying there only to marry, go to Newberry; and from thence break out by degrees, as the matter ſhould be taken.

My Lady ſcreamed, reſiſted, and did all that woman could do, to get free: And more than once, people who heard her cry out for help were put a wrong ſcent: And had we not met with your honour (who would ſee with your own eyes, and hear with your own ears) the affair had been all over in the way Sir Hargrave wiſhed, and was at ſo much pains and expence to effect. For, Sir, the chariot generally drove ſo faſt, that before paſſengers could have reſolved whether to interfere or not, whe ſhould have been out of ſight or reach.

Sir Hargrave is in the greateſt rage with us all, becauſe we ſtood not better by him. He refuſes any favour to me, and threatens to piſtol me the moment he ſees me. That's to be my reward.

A coach-and-four was ordered to carry the widow and her two daughters to Reading, to the New Inn there, where they were to reſide for a week or ſo, till all was blown over, and that they might be out of the way of anſwering queſtions: And my brother Awberry, as I call him, and hope to make him (for he is a very honeſt man) was to go to them there.

And there, in all probability, had Sir Hargrave ſucceeded, and been as good as his word, ſhould I have been the huſband of as tender-hearted a young woman as any in the parish she lives in.

of

Here is a very long Letter, may it please you, Sir. I have shortened it however as much as I could: But in hatred to myself, and the vile ways I have, by excess of good-nature, and by meeting with wicked masters, been drawn into — For the clearing of my sister's character, who lives in credit among her neighbours, and of every other person who might otherwise have been suspected — In justice to Mrs. Awberry's, and her two daughters, and her son's characters — And in justice so far to Sir Hargrave's as that he intended marriage— In justice, I say, to all these persons, I thought proper thus to give you, Sir, all that I knew relating to this wicked transaction. And if, may it please your honour, I were to be taken up, I could say no more before a magistrate; except this, which I had like to have forgot; which is, that had it not been for me, some mischief might have been done, between Sir Hargrave's servants and yours, if not to your honour's person.

All that I most humbly beg, is, the pardon of so sweet a Lady. I have chosen, ever-to-be-honoured Sir, to write to you, whose goodness is so generally talked of, and who have so nobly redeemed and protected her. Mr Reeves, I know, has suffered too much in his mind to forgive me. He is a worthy gentleman. I am sorry for the disturbance I have given him. I have hopes given me, that I shall get employment on the Keys, or as a tide-waiter extraordinary.

Please the Lord, I will never, never more, be the tool of wicked masters. All I wish for is, to be able to do justice to the love of an honest young woman; and I am resolved, whether so enabled or not, to starve, rather than to go any more, no, not for a single hour, into the service of the iniquitous gentlemen I have so often named in this long Letter.

If I might be assured, that I may pursue unmolested, any honest calling, so as that I may not be tempted or driven into unhappy courses, my heart would be at rest.

There might have been murder in this affair: That shocks me to think of. O Sir, good, excellent, brave, and the most worthy of gentlemen, you have given to me as great a deliverance, as you have to the Lady: Yea, greater; for mine may be a deliverance, if I make a proper use of it, of soul as well well as body. Which God grant, as also your honour's health and prosperity, to the prayers of

Your Honour's ever-devoted Humble Servant,
WILLIAM WILSON.

I thought I had something else to say! Something it is of high importance: Your life is threatened, Sir: God preserve your precious life.

ACCOUNT OF A TRAGICAL INCIDENT IN FRANCE. 1765. *)

A land-holder of Castres, by name Sirven, had three daughters: as this family is of the protestant religion, the youngest of his daughters was taken by force out of his Wife's arms, put into a Convent, and whipped, by way of teaching her her catechism. The Girl run mad, and threw herself into a well, at about a league's distance from her father's house. On this, the zealots of religion made not the least doubt of its being the father, mother, and sisters of the child, that had drowned her. It had passed currently among the Roman Catholics of the Province, that one of the capital points of the protestant Religion was, that fathers and mothers are bound to hang, drown, or cut the throats of any of their Children they may suspect of having any inclination towards the Romish religion. This was precisely at the very time that the Calas's were in irons, and that the skaffold was preparing for their execution.

The news of the Girl's being drowned, came directly then to Toulouse. "Ay (said they) here's a fresh instance of a father's and mother's murdering their Child." The outcry was general; the fury of the public was augmented upon it; Calas was broke upon the wheel; Sirven, his wife, and his daughters, ordered to be apprehended. Sirven, frightened, had only the time to fly with all his sick family. Destitute of all aid, they were forced to walk on foot over steep hills, at that time covered with snow. One of his daughters was delivered, amidst the ice, of a child, which, dying as it was, she carried in in her arms, herſelf hardly alive. At length, they got into the road that leads to Switzerland.

*) Voltaire's Letter to M. D'Am - - - 1765. 12.

The ſame chance that brought to me the children of Calas, directed alſo to me Sirven. Figure to yourſelf, my friend, four ſheep accuſed by butchers of having devoured a lamb: This is what I ſaw; but it is impoſſible for any deſcription to do juſtice to ſo much innocence, and ſo much diſtreſs. What ought I to do? Or what would you have done in my place? it is enough to groan only over ſuch abuſes of human nature? I took the liberty of writing to the Preſident of Languedoc, but he was not at Toulouſe. I got one of your friends to preſent a petition to the Vice-chancellor. In the mean while, near Caſtres, the father, the mother, and the two daughters, were executed in effigy; their eſtate confiſcated, their goods deſpoiled, the ruin was complete. Behold here a virtuous, decent, innocent family delivered up to ſhame and beggary among ſtrangers. It is true, they found pity, but how cruel it is to be objects of pity as long as they live! The anſwer, however, ſent me to my application, was, that they might poſſibly obtain their pardon.

DESCRIPTION OF A DWARF WHICH WAS KEPT IN THE PALACE OF THE LATE KING OF POLAND. *)

The parents of this dwarf were healthy, ſtrong peaſants; who affirmed, that at the time of his birth, he ſcarcely weighed a pound and a quarter. It is not known what were then his dimenſions, but one may judge they were very ſmall, as he was preſented on a plate to be baptized, and for a long time had a wooden-ſhoe for his bed.

His mouth, though well proportioned to the reſt of his body, was not large enough to receive the nipple of his mother; he was ſuckled therefore by a goat, and ſhe performed the part of a nurſe admirably well. When ſix months old he had the ſmallpox, and recovered without any other aſſiſtance than the care of his mother and the milk of the Goat. At the age of eighteen months he could articulate ſome words. At two years, he could ſupport himſelf upon his legs, and walk almoſt without *) Buffon and d'Aubenton's Natural Hiſtory T. XV.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0143
DFG

without assistance; a pair of shoes were then made for him, which were no more than an inch and half in length.

He was attacked by several diseases; but there were no marks of any other disease upon the skin besides the small-pox. — He was now six years of age: hitherto his food had been garden-stuff, bacon and potatoes; his height was about fifteen inches, and he did not weigh more than thirteen pounds; his person was agreable and well proportioned, he was in perfect health, but there was little appearance of intellect. — At this time the King of Poland ordered him to Luneville, gave him the name of Bébé, and kept him in his palace. Bébé thus exchanged the condition of a peasant for the luxuries of a court; but he experienced no change either in his body or his mind.

He had no sense of religion; was incapable of reasoning; could learn neither music nor dancing; was susceptible however of passions, particularly anger, jealousy, and voluptuousness.— When sixteen years old, he was only twenty-nine inches in height; he was still healthy and well proportioned; but at this time his strength began to decrease, the spine became crooked, the head fell forwards, the legs were enfeebled, one shoulderblade projected, the nose was greatly enlarged; Bébé lost his gaiety, and became a valetudinarian; and yet his stature was increased four inches in the four succeeding years. —

M. le Comte de Tressan, foretold that this dwarf would die of old age before he was thirty; and in effect so it was, for at twenty-one he was shrunk and decrepit; and at twenty-two, it was with difficulty that he could make an hundred steps successively.—In his twenty third year, he was attacked with a fever, and fell into a kind of a lethargy: he had some intervals, but spoke with great difficulty: for the five last days, his ideas seemed to be more clear than when he was in health. This desease soon proved fatal. — At the time of his death, he was measured thirty-three inches.

REMARKS

REMARKS ON THE PRESENT STAE OF THE TRADE OF MASSACHUSETS-BAY, &c.*)

The other governments of New England, ) ſixty or ſeventy years ago, imported no Engliſh goods, or next to none, directly from England; they were ſupplied by the Maſſachuſets trader. Now although our trade with great Britain, upon the whole, is ſurpoſed to cauſe no addition to our wealth, yet, at leaſt ſo far as we are the channel for conveying ſupplies of goods to the other colonies for their conſumption, a benefit undoubtedly accrues. New-Hampſhire, by their convenient ſituation, were induced to become their own importers in a great meaſure ſome years before the alteration of our currency.

They made their returns by ſhipping lumber, &c. eaſier than we did. At preſent they probably import Engliſh goods equal to their conſumption. Connecticut, until we aboliſhed our bills of credit and theirs with them, continued their trade with us for Engliſh goods, but ſoon after turned great part of their trade to New-York, and ſome perſons became importers from England. They ſoon diſcovered their error. The produce of New-York is ſo much the ſame with that of Connecticut that the Maſſachuſets market will always be the beſt. The importer finds it more difficult, to make his returns to England from Connecticut, than from the Maſſachuſets. Connecticut trade therefore ſoon returned to the ſtate it had formerly been in.

Rhode-Island, in part, became their own importers alſo, which they ſtill continue.

For the other colonies on the continent, between South-Carolina and the Maſſachuſets, there never has been any conſiderable trade. The chief benefit from that colony has been the affording freights for our ſhips in the European trade.

North-Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, the Jerſeys and Penſylvania, untill within twenty or thirty years, uſed to furniſh us with proviſions for which we paid them in Weſt-India and ſometimes Engliſh goods and with our own produce and manufactures. Philadelphia of late is become the mart for the grain grain of great part of Maryland, which they manufacture into flour and ſupply the Maſſachuſets, Rhode-Island and New-Hampſhire, and take little or no pay in return but Money and bills of Exchange. It ſeems agreed that the ſouthern colonies as far as Virginia are deſigned by nature for grain countries. It behoves us therefore, either like the Dutch for the other nations in Europe, to become carriers for them with our ſhipping, or to contrive ſome articles of produce or manufacture for barter or exchange with them, rather than in vain to attempt raiſing to more advantage than they do, what nature has peculiarly formed them for.

*) Governor Hutchinſon's Hiſtory of the Colony of Maſſachuſets Bay. Vol. 2. Lond. 1767. 8.

) Viz: Connecticut, Rhode-Island and New-Hampſhire.

Our trade with the Weſt-India Islands was much more profitable to us, from the beginning of King William's to the end of Queen Anne's war with France, than at any time ſince. Ever ſince the peace of Utrecht it has been continually growing worſe. Barbadoes required then, more northern produce than it does now. The other Islands, except Jamaica, have very little increaſed their demand. From the growth of the northern colonies and the new methods of living, the produce of the Islands is more than double the price it uſed to be. Perhaps tea and coffee, alone, cauſe as great conſumption of ſugar as all other uſes, to which it was applied, did formerly.

The produce of the northern colonies is as low in the Islands as ever it was. Formerly their demand for northern produce not only afforded us in return, rum, ſugar and molaſſes ſufficient, for our own conſumption, but left a ſurplus which, in war time eſpecially, every year gave freight to ſhips from Boſton to England, and paid our debts there or procured a ſupply of goods from thence, whereas, at this day, the whole ſupply of northern produce to the Britiſh Islands will not pay for one half the Weſt-India goods conſumed or uſed in the northern colonies.

The trade to the Dutch colonies, it is true, is ſince increaſed, and our goods from time to time find their way into the French Islands, ſometimes through the Dutch, at other times, when French neceſſity calls for them, by permiſſion or other contrivances, and by this means we are able to procure the Weſt-India goods we want for our conſumption over and above what we can obtain in pay for our produce from our own Islands. Britain herſelf ſuffers, with her northern colonies, and pays dearly by the advanced price of ſugar, rum, &c. The Weſt-Indians, notwithſtanding, are continually endeavouring vouring to reſtrain our trade with the foreign Islands and colonies. If they could take of our produce as much as we have occaſion for of theirs it would appear leſs unreaſonable, or if, by our trade with the foreign colonies, the price of the produce of our own Islands had fallen below the former rates they might have colour for complaint; but when the vent for northern produce by means of the great increaſe of the northern colonies, bears no proportion, from any one of them, to what it did formerly, and yet the produce of the Islands is double the price it was formerly, and their eſtates raiſed to more than five times the value, it muſt be unreaſonable to burden not only the inhabitants of the northern colonies but of Great Britain alſo with a ſtill farther advanced price of Weſt-India goods, and all to aggrandize the Weſt-India planters. Such a burden would infallibly be the effect of a rigid execution of the laws reſtraining or incumbering our trade with the French and Dutch colonies. But this is not all. If our trade with the foreign colonies be ſuppreſſed and our ſupplies of Weſt-India goods are confined to our own Islands, the balance above what they require of our produce, muſt be paid them in Silver and Gold or exchange upon England, either of which muſt leſſen our returns to England, and will probably leſſen our conſumption of their manufactures.

Charlevoix ſays the French of Canada live well if they can get fine cloaths; if not, they retrench from the table to adorn the perſon. I think the Engliſh coloniſts would rather abate from their dreſs than from their punch, tea, coffee, &c.

If the queſtion be, which is moſt for the intereſt of the Britiſh dominions in general, to reſtrain the French American trade or to give it all poſſible encouragement, it muſt be given in favour of encouragement. The ſpeedy ſettlement of this vaſt continent is generally ſuppoſed to be advantageous to Great Britain. Every new houſe, new farm and new ſubject adds to the conſumption of Britiſh manufactures. Nothing more contributes to this ſpeedy ſettlement than a vent for the lumber, a great help in clearing the lands near the ſea and upon navigable rivers, and for proviſions, the produce of ſettlements when made. But, on the other hand, admit that raiſing the price of Weſt-India produce tends to increaſe the number of plantations in the Island, yet thoſe plantations, although more valuable, will never bear any proportion in number to the plantations and ſettlements upon the continent, and the increaſe of white ſubjects will be ſtill leſs in proportion.

Blacks eat and drink nothing and wear next to nothing of Britiſh manufacture.

There has been a great alteration in our trade with Great Britain. At the beginning of this period, and till within 30 or 40 years paſt, merchants and manufacturers in England ſhipped goods upon their own accounts, which were ſold here upon commiſſion, and although there was appearance of profit from the ſales, yet, by the loſs upon returns, moſt adventurers in a courſe of years were great loſers. Diſcerning perſons in London, when they ſaw a man going deep into trade to the colonies, would pronounce him ſhort lived.

The trade is now upon a more certain footing for the people of England. Few goods are ſent to be ſold upon commiſſion. The manufacturer depends upon the Merchant in England for his pay. The merchant receives his commiſſion and generally agrees with his correſpondent, for whom he is in advance, in the colonies, that after ſix or nine months credit, if payment be not made, intereſt ſhall be allowed.

Bad debts muſt be expected more or leſs upon all extenſive trade. Perhaps they are not more frequent in the colonies than among the like number of traders in England.

The cod and whale fiſhery are in a more flouriſhing ſtate than formerly. The veſſels employed in cod fiſhing have been more numerous, but they were ſmall ſhallops, and one of the ſchooners now employed in that fiſhery takes as much fiſh in a ſeaſon as two ſhallops uſed to do.

The French are ſuppoſed to maintain a Fiſherman at leſs expence than the Engliſh. Be it ſo, the Engliſh catch and make their fiſh at leſs expence than the French notwithſtanding. Five or ſix well-fed Marble-head or Cape-Ann men catch as much fiſh as ten or twelve meagre Frenchmen in the ſame time. The French find their account in taking what they call their muid or mud-fiſh when the Engliſh cannot. This is owing to the vent which the French markets afford for that ſort of fiſh. In what they call a ſedentaire and we a ſhort fiſhery we ſhall always outdo them, unleſs the ports of the other nations in Europe as well as thoſe of the French ſhould be ſhut againſt us. If every family in Britain ſhould make one dinner in a week upon New-England codfiſh it would cauſe an amazing increaſe of the conſumption of Britiſh manufactures.

It

It is certain that before the war of 1744 the French fishery declined. They used to go from Louisbourg to Canso and buy the English fish for the French European markets, because it came cheaper to them, than they could catch and make it.

The increase of the consumption of oil by lamps as well as by divers manufactures in Europe has been no small encouragement to our whale fishery. The flourishing state of the Island of Nantucket must be attributed to it. The cod and whale fishery, being the principal source of our returns to Great-Britain, are therefore worthy not only of provincial but national attention.

Formerly the trade to Newfoundland was valuable. The increase of the northern colonies has carried from us great part of the supplies we used to make. Our late-began commerce with Nova-Scotia is valuable, but will not compensate for this loss.

The manufacture of pot-ash promises great benefit to the colonies. It is to be wished, they may meet with no discouragement. Frauds in package ad adulteration cannot be of any long continuance. The least that can be done by every government, where it is manufactured, is a law to compel every person to set his name and the name of the town where he lives upon the cask in which he packs his pot-ash. This will go a great way towards preventing fraud. Should the Russia traders combine to undersell those who import from America, yet it will be considered that the Russia trade is drawing every year from the nation a large balance in bullion, whereas the increase of imports from the colonies only tends to an increase of national exports, and the body of the nation will combine against the Russia traders.

I remember one advantage from paper money. Upon the depreciation, from time to time, the wages of seamen and the rate at which coasting vessels and others were hired did not immediatily rise in proportion to the rise of silver and exchange with London and other parts of the world. We were thus led to employ our vessels as carriers to and from many parts of the continent, the West Indies and Europe, because we let them upon cheaper freight and hire, than any other colony would do. The war in 1744 gave a twin to this part of business, but we may learn from what happened then, whithout any premeditated plan or design, what we are capable of, viz. navigating our vessels, especially if further improvements be made in the conſtruction of them, with ſo little expence as, like the Dutch in Europe, to become carriers for America. The advantage, in this particular inſtance of the reduction of the price of labour ſhews us what improvements might be made in other branches of trade and manufacture, if ever it ſhould be recluded in proportion to the price in Europe, compared with the price of the neceſſaries of life. It was hard parting with a free open trade to all parts of the world which the Maſſachuſets carried on before the preſent charter. The principal acts of parliament were made many years before, but there was no cuſtomhouſe eſtabliſhed in the colony, nor any authority anxious for carrying thoſe acts into execution. It was ſeveral years after the new charter, before it was generally obſerved. If we are under no other obligations, we certainly enjoy and cannot ſubſiſt without the protection of our mother country, over our trade at ſea, our perſonal eſtate aſhore, the territory itſelf, our liberties and lives. It is owing, in a great meaſure, to the taxes, duties and exciſes, the conſequences of an enormous load of debt, that the manufactures in England come dearer to us, than thoſe of other countries. Great part of this debt was incurred by our immediate protection. Shall we think much of ſharing in the burden when whe have been ſo great ſharers in the benefit? There is no way in which we can more effectually contribute, to the national relief than by ſubmitting to regulations and reſtraints upon our trade, and yet no way in which we ſhould be ſo little ſenſible of it.

It has been the general voice that our trade to Great-Britain ſhould be contracted, and that our inhabitants ſhould be employed in the ſame kind of manufactures we import from thence, the materials for moſt of wich we have or may have within ourſelves.

The great creator of the univerſe in infinite wisdom has ſo formed the earth that different part of it; from the ſoil, climate, &c. are adapted to different produce, & he ſo orders and diſpoſes the genius, temper, numbers and other circumſtances relative to the inhabitants as to render ſome employments peculiarly proper for one country, and others for another, and by this proviſion a mutual intercourſe is kept up between the different parts of the Globe. It would be folly in a Virginian to attempt a plantation of rice for the ſake of having all he conſumes from the produce of his own labour, when South-Caroline, by nature, is peculiarly deſigned for rice, and capable of supplying one half of the world. Old countries, stocked with people, are ordinarily best adapted to manufactures. Would it be the interest of New-England, whilst thin of people, to turn their attention from the whale, cod, marckerel and herring fishery, their lumber trade and ship building which require but few hands compared with many other sorts of business, to such manufactures as are now imported from Great-Britain, or to take their sons from clearing the land and turning an uncultivated wilderness into pleasant & profitable fields, and set them to spinning, weaving and the like employments? I do not mean to discourage any persons who cannot improve their time to greater advantage, from employing themselves and families, in any branch of manufacture whatsoever. Idleness is the certain parent of vice. Industry, introduced, will ordinarily tend to produce a change of manners. A general philanthropy will induce us to dilight in and contribute to the happiness of every part of the human race, by which we ourselves are no sufferers; the state from whence we sprang and upon which we still depend for protection, may justly expect to be distinguished by us, and that wo should delight in and contribute to its prosperity, beyond all other parts of the globe.

of

AN ACCOUNT OF ALGIERS. *)

This place, which for several ages hath braved the greatest powers of Christendom, is not above a mile and a half in circuit, tho' computed to contain about 2000 Christian slaves, 15000 Jews, and 100000 Mahometans, of which only thirty (at most) are Renegadoes. It is situated upon the declivity of a hill, that faces the north and northeast; whereby the houses rise so gradually above each other, that there is scarce one in the whole city, but what, in one or other of those directions, hath a full view of the sea. The walls are weak and of little defence, unless where they are further secured by some additional fortification. The ditch, which formetly surrounded the city, is almost entirely filled up.

*) D. Shaw's Travels or observations relating to several parts of Barbary and the Levant. Ed. 2. Lond. 1757. gr. 4.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0151
DFG

Towards the sea, it is better fortified, and capable to make a more strenuous defence. For the embrasures, in this direction, have all brass guns and in good order. The battery of the Mole Gate, upon the east angle of the city, is mounted with long pieces of ordinance, one of which hath seven cylinders, each of them three inches in diameter. Half a furlong to the W. S. W. of the harbour, is the battery of Fisher's Gate, or the Gate of the Sea, which consisting of a double row of cannon, commands the entrance into the port, and the road before it.

The port is of an oblong figure, a hundred and thirty fathom long, and eighty broad. The eastern mound of it, which was formerly the Island. is well secured by several strong fortifications. The Round Castle, (built by the Spaniards whilst they were masters of the Island) and the two remote batteries, (erected within this century) are said to be bombproof; and have each of them their lower embrasures mounted with thirty six pounders. But the middle battery, which appears to be the oldest, is of the least defence. As none of the fortificacions are assisted with either mines or advanced works; and as the soldiers, who are to guard and defend them, cannot be kept up to any regular courses of duty and attendance, a few resolute battalions, protected by a smal squadron of ships, would have no great difficulty to make themselves quickly masters of the very strongest.

The hills and valleys round about Algiers are every where beautified with gardens and country seats, whither the inhabitants of better fashion retire, during the sommer season. The country seats are little white houses, shaded by a variey of fruit trees and evergreens; whereby they afford a gay and delightful prospect towards the sea. The gardens are well stocked with melons, fruits and pot herbs of all kinds; and what is chiefly regarded in these hot climates, each of them enjoys as well as the city a great command of excellent water, from many rivulets and fountains.

The government of the Algerines, which differs little from that of Tunis, consists of the Dey, and a common council, composed of the thirty Viah Bashees, tho' the Mufti, the Cady, and the whole soldiery sometimes, are called upon to assist. All affairs of moment ought to be agreed upon by this assembly, before they pass in to laws. But for some years there has been little account made of this body; and they have been convened only to consent to measures before concerted in the cabinet council.

council. As the Dey is chosen out of the army, each order, even the most inferiour, having an equal right and title to that dignity, every bold and aspiring soldier, tho' taken yesterday from the plough, may be considered as heir apparent to the throne, and lyes under no necessity to wait 'till sickness or old age remove the present incumbent: It is enough that he is able to protect himself with the same cymiter, which he has had the hardiness to sheath in the bowels of his predecessor; rarely one in ten having the fortune to die without a musket ball or a cymiter. However this factious and discontented humour seems, at present, to be somewhat purged and allayed, by the many seasonable executions, that have been lately made of these aspiring members.

The whole force of Algiers, in Turks and Cologlies, is computed, at present, to be about six thousand five hundred; two thousand whereof are supposed to be old, and excused from duty; and of the four thousand five hundred that remain, one thousand are constantly employed in relieving annually their garrisons, whilst the rest are either to arm out their cruisers, or else form the three flying camps, which are sent out every summer under the command of the provincial Viceroys. To the Turkish troops we may join about two thousand Zwowah, as the Moorish horse and footmen are called, which are kept in constant pay, and being all of them hereditary enemies to the Turks, are little considered in the real safeguard of the government. The method observed in keeping this large and populous kingdom in obedience, is not so much by force of arms, as by diligently observing the old political maxim, divide and command. For the provincial Viceroys are very watchful over the motions of the Arabian tribes, who are under their several districts and jurisdictions; and as these are in continual jealousies and disputes with one another, the Beys have nothing to do but keep up the ferment. There are a number of Arabian and African tribes, who, if their neighbours should observe a neutrality, would be too hard for the whole army of Algiers, notwithstanding each Turk values himself as a match for twenty Arabs.

To make up deficiencies in the army, their cruising vessels are sent out, every five or six years, to the Levant for recruits, which generally consist of shepherds, outlaws, and persons of the meanest condition. Yet, after they have been a little instructed by their fellow soldiers, and have god caps to their heads, shoes to their feet, and a pair of knives to their girdle, they quickly begin to affect grandeur and majesty, expect to be saluted with the title of (Effendi) your Grace, and look upon the most considerable citizens as their slaves, and the consuls of the allied nations as their footmen. Mahomet Bashaw, who was Dey when I arrived at Algiers, was not ashamed to own his extraction, in a notable dispute he had once with the deputy consul of a neighbouring nation; My mother, says he, sold sheep's feet, and my father neat's tongues, but they would have been ashamed to have exposed to sale so worthless a tongue as yours.

But, besides these Levant-Turks, the Dey may, at his pleasure, and especially upon any emergency, enroll the Cologlies, as they call the sons of such soldiers, who have been permitted to marry at Algiers; tho' since they made an unsuccessful attempt upon the government, they have been excluded from the honour of being Dey, Aga of the Janizaries, and other considerable employments.

The officers that command this small army (and it would be the same if it amounted to its former complement of twelve thousand) are the Aga or general, thirty Tiah Bashees or colonels, eight hundred Bulluck Bashees or captains, and about half that number of Oda Bashees or lieutenants. The method of arriving at these posts, is not by money and interest, but by age and seniority, the oldest soldier being advanced upon the death of his captain, &c. &c. tho' by the permission of the Dey, a younger soldier may purchase the rank of an elder, the latter degrading himself in return.

The yearly taxes of this great and fertile kingdom bring not more into the treasury than 300000 dollars: But it is computed, that the eighth part of prizes, the effects of persons dying without children, the contributions from the independent Kaides, and the frequent Aver-eas, and oppressions, may bring in as much more. To compensate this, the pay is but small, the youngest soldier receiving only 406 Aspers, every two months, and the eldest, or those in full pay, no more than 5800, whereof 696 make a dollar. Besides the pay, such Tiah and Bulluck Bashees as are unmarried, have each of them eight loaves of bread a day, and the Oda Bashees and private soldiers, who are in the same condition, have four; each loaf being about five ounces in weight, and three Aspers in value.

In

In the ordinary distribution of justice, there is in this, as in all other Turkish governments, an officer whom they call the Cady, who is obliged to attend at the court of justice once or twice a day, where he hears and determines the several suits and complaints that are brought before him. But as bribery is too often charged upon the Cady, all affairs of moment are laid before the Dey, or master of the horse. At all these tribunals, the cause is quickly decided, nothing more being required than the proof of what is alleged; so that a matter of debt, trespass, or of the highest crimes will be finally decided, and the sentence executed in less than an hour.

In cases of debt, the debtor is usually detained in prison, 'till the (Chouses) bayliffs have seized upon his effects and sold them. If the sale amounts to more than the debt, then the overplus is returned, if it comes short, he is notwithstanding released, and no future demands are made upon him. Less offences are punished with the Bastinado: The offender it to receive so many strokes (sometimes two or three hundred) on his buttocks or the soles of his feet, with sticks of the thickness of ones little finger. For clipping or debasing the publick coin, the old Egyptian punishment is inflicted, which is to cut off the hands of the transgressor. Whatsoever Jew or Christian subject is guilty of murder or any other capital crime, he is to be carried without the gates of the city, and burnt alive: But the Moors and Arabs are either impaled for the same crime, or hung up by the neck, over the battlements of the city, or else thrown upon the hooks that are fixed in the walls below, where sometimes they hang, in the most exquisite agonies and torments, thirty or forty hours, before they expire. The Turks are not punished in publick, like other offenders; but are, out of respect to their caracters, sent to the house of the Aga, where, according to the quality of the misdemeanour, they are bastinadoed or strangled. Out of modesty likewise to the sex, when the women offend, they are not exposed to the populace, but sent to some private house of correction; or, if the crime is capital, they are then tyed up in a sack, carried out into the sea, and drowned. The western Moors still use the barbarous punishment of sawing asunder the transgressor. For which purpose they prepare two boards, of the same length and breadth with the unfortunate person, perſon, and having tyed him betwixt them, they proceed to the execution, by beginning ad the head.

The naval force of this Regency, for two centuries, has been, at one time or other, a terror to all the trading nations of Chriſtendom. With relation therefore to Chriſtian Princes, this government has alliance with us, the French, the Dutch, and the Swedes. Great application has been often made, by the Port, in behalf of the Emperor's ſubjects; though all their interceſſions have hitherto proved ineffectual, notwithſtanding the Algerines acknowledge themſelves to be the vaſſals of the Grand Seignor, and, as ſuch, ſhould comply. The Swedes purchaſed their peace at the rate of 70,000 dollars: and, as theſe cruiſers rarely meet with veſſels of that nation, it has been hitherto diſcourſed of as a great myſtery. The ſucceſs which the Dutch meth with, during a war of twelve years, to deſtroy a few of their veſſels; the magnificent preſent of naval ſtores that was promiſed, upon ratifying the peace; together with the natural timorouſneſs of the Dey, leſt, by further loſſes, he ſhould be reckon'd unfortunate (a dangerous character in this country for a commander) were the chief and concurring reaſons for extending their friendſhip to that nation. It is certain that the greateſt part of the ſoldiers, and the ſea officiers in general, very ſtrenuouſly oppoſed it; urging, that it would be in vain to arm out their veſſels, when they had peace with the three trading nations; that their loſs was inconſiderable, when compared with the riches obtained by the war; concluding with a very expreſſive Arabian proverb, that ſuch perſons ought never to ſow, who are afraid of the ſparrows: As the younger ſoldiers cannot well ſubſiſt without the money that ariſes from their ſhares in prizes, there has been no ſmall murmuring at the little ſucceſs they have lately met with. And it is very probable (as a little time perhaps will diſcover) that the very moment any conſiderable addition is made to their fleet, nay, perhaps, without any further augmentation, the preſent Dey will be obliged to leſſen the number of his alliances, from thoſe very principles which, a few years ago, engaged his predeceſſor to increaſe them.

The Algerines have certainly a great eſteem and friendſhip for our nation; and, provided there could be any ſecurity in a government, that is guided by chance and humour, more than by counſel and mature deliberation, it is very probable that, which of the trading nations ſoever they may think fit to quarrel with, we have little to apprehend. The Dutch are are very industrious in cultivating a good understanding with them, by making an annual present; a method hitherto very prevalent and successful: whilst, on the other hand, the French may influence them as much, by putting them in mind of the execution which their bombs did formerly to this city, and of a later instance of their resentment ad Tripoli. But as there is rarely any great prudence in using high words and menaces at Algiers, it is certain, provided the Algerines are to be sway'd with fear, that we have as much interest in Sir Edward Spragg's expedition at Bou jeiah, as the French can have in that of the Marquis d'Estrees at Algiers. Nothwithstanding likewise all the arguments that may be urged in behalf of Marseilles and Toulon, these people are not to be persuaded but that Minorca and Gibraltar are in a more convenient situation to give them disturbance. But reason and argument will not always be good politics at this court, where the first minister is the cook, and where an insolvent soldiery have too often the command. In critical junctures, therefore, the ground is to be maintained by the nice management and address of the consul; by knowing how to make proper application to the particular passions of those who have the Dey's ear; by flattering one, placing a confidence in another, and especially by making a proper use of those invincible arguments, money, caf-tans and gold watches. For according to an old and infallible observation, Give a Turk money with one hand, and he will permit his eyes to be plucked out by the other.

Such was the political state and condition of this Regency, when I left it, A. D. 1732. How long it may continue so will be hard to determine; because, what little there is here of justice, honesty, or public faith, proceeds rather from fear and compulsion, than from choice and free election. For the acknowledgment is very just, which Ali Bashaw, a late Dey, made to Consul Cole, upon complaining of the injuries that our vessels met with from his cruisers: The Algerines, says he, are a company of rogues, and I am their captain.

AN

AN ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF JOHN REINHOLD PATKUL. *)

JOHN REINHOLD PATKUL was born of a noble family in Livonia, a northern province belonging to the crown of Sweden. The Livonians having been ſtript of their privileges, and great part of their eſtates by Charles XI, Patkul was deputed to make their complaint, which he did with ſuch eloquence and courage, that the king, laying his hand upon his ſhoulder, ſaid, You have ſpoken for your country as a brave man ſhould, and I eſteem you for it.

Charles, however, who added the baſeneſs of hypocriſy to the ferocity of a tyrant, was determined to puniſh the zeal and honeſty which he thought fit to commend, and a few days afterwards cauſed Patkul to be declared guilty of high treaſon, and condemned to die. Patkul, however, found means to eſcape into Poland, where he continued till Charles was dead. He hoped that his ſentence would have been then reſerved, as it had been declared unjuſt, even by the tyrant that procuret it; but being diſappointed in this expectation, he applied to Auguſtus, king of Poland, and ſollicited him to attempt the conqueſt of Livonia from the Swedes, which, he ſaid, might be eaſily effected, as the people were ready to ſhake off their yoke, and the king of Sweden was a child incapable of compelling their ſubjection.

Auguſtus poſſeſſed himſelf of Livonia, in conſequence of this propoſal, and afterwards, when Charles XII. entered the province to recover it, Patkul commanded in the Saxon army againſt him. Charles was victorious, and Patkul, ſome time afterwards, being diſguſted at the haughty behaviour of Gen. Flemming, Auguſtus's favourite, entered into the ſervice of the Czar, with whom Auguſtus was in ſtrict alliance, and a little before Charles compelled Auguſtus to abdicate the throne of Poland, and his ſubjects to elect Staniſlaus in his ſtead. The Czar ſent Patkul, with the title of his ambaſſador in Saxony, to prevail with Auguſtus to meet him at Grodno, that they might confer on the ſtate of their affairs.

This conference took place, and immediately afterwards the Czar went from Grodno, to quell a rebellion in Aſtracan. As ſoon *) Anecdotes of J. R. Patkul, now firſt printed from a Manuſcript Account written by the Lutheran Clergyman who attended him in his preparation for his Death &c. Lond. 1761. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0158
DFG

ſoon as the Czar was gone, Auguſtus, to the ſurprize of all Europe, ordered Patkul, who was then at Dreſden, to be ſeized as a ſtate criminal.

By this injurious and unprecedented action Auguſtus at once violated the law of nations, and weakened his own intereſt; for Patkul was not only an ambaſſador, but an ambaſſador from the only power that could afford him protection. The cauſe, however, was this; Patkul had diſcovered that Auguſtus's miniſters were to propoſe a peace to Charles upon any terms, and had therefore formed a deſign to be before hand with him, and procure a ſeparate peace between Charles and his new maſter the Czar. The deſign of Patkul was diſcovered, and to prevent its ſucceſs Auguſtus ventured to ſeize his perſon, aſſuring the Czar that he was a traytor, and had betrayed them both.

Auguſtus was ſoon after reduced to beg a peace of Charles at any rate, and Charles granted it upon certain conditions, one of which was that he ſhould deliver up Patkul. This condition reduced Auguſtus to a very diſtreſsful dilemma; the Czar, at this very time, reclaimed Patkul as his ambaſſador, and Charles demanded, with threats, that he ſhould be put into his hands. Auguſtus, therefore, contrived an expedient by which he hoped to ſatisfy both; he ſent ſome guards to deliver Patkul, who was priſoner in the caſtle of Koenigſtein, to the Swediſh troops; but by ſecret orders, privately diſpatched, he commanded the governor to let him eſcape. The governor, tho' he received this order in time, yet diſappointed its intention by his villainy and his avarice; he knew Patkul to be very rich, and, having it now in his power to ſuffer him to eſcape with impunity, he demanded of Patkul a large ſum for the favour; Patkul refuſed to buy that liberty, which he made no doubt would be gratuitouſly reſtored, in conſequence of the Czar's requiſition and remonſtrance, and, in the mean time, the Swediſh guards arrived with the order for his being dilivered up to them.

By this party he was firſt carried to Carles's head quarters at Altranſtadt, where he continued three months bound to a ſtake with a heavy chain of iron; he was then conducted to Caſimir, where Charles ordered him to be tryed, and he was by his judges found Guilty. His ſentence depended upon the king, and after having been kept a priſoner ſome months, under a guard of Mayerfeldt's regiment, uncertain of his fate, he was on the 28th of September 1707, towards the evening, delivered into the cuſtody of a regiment of dragoons, commanded by Col. Nicholas Hielm. On the next day, the 29th, the colonel took the chaplain of his regiment aſide, and telling him that Patkul was to die the next day, ordered him to acquaint him with his fate, and prepare him for it. About this very time he was to have been married to a Saxon lady of great quality, virtue, and beauty, a circumſtance which renders his caſe ſtill more affecting. What followed, in conſequence of the Colonel's order to the miniſter will be related in his own words:

delivered

Immediately after evening-ſervice I went to his priſon, where I found him lying on his bed. The firſt compliments over, I entered upon the melancholy duty of my profeſſion, and turning to the officer who had him in charge, told him the colonel's orders were, that I ſhould be alone with his priſoner.

The officer having withdrawn, Patkul graſping both my hands in his, cry'd out, with moſt affecting anxiety and diſtreſs, My dear paſtor! What are you to declare? what am I to hear?

I bring you, replied I, the ſame tidings that the prophet brought to king Hezekiah, Set thine houſe in order for thou muſt die. To-morrow, by this time, thou ſhalt be no longer in the number of the living! At this terrible warning, he bowed himſelf upon his bed, and burſt into tears.

I attempted to comfort him, by ſaying, that he muſt without all doubt, have often meditated on this ſubject: Yes, cried he, I know, alas! too well. that we muſt all die; but the death prepared for me will be cruel, and inſupportable.

I aſſured him, that the manner of his death was to me totally unknown; but, believing that he would be prepared for it, I was ſure his ſoul ſhould be received into the number of happy ſpirits. Here he roſe up, and folding his hands together. Merciful God! let me then die the death of the righteous! A little after, with his face inclined to the wall, where ſtood his bed, he broke out into this ſoliloquy: Auguſtus! O Auguſtus, what muſt be thy lot one day? Muſt thou not anſwer for all the crimes thou haſt committed?

He then obſerved that he was driven out from his country, by a ſentence againſt his life pronounced for doing what the king himſelf encouraged him to do, ſaying to him one day, in terms of much kindneſs, Patkul, maintain the rights of your country like a man of honour, and with all the ſpirit you you are capable of. That flying into an enemy's country was also unavoidable, as the country of an ally would not have afforded him protection; but that he was in Saxony a wretched exile, not a counsellor, or adviser; that, before his arrival, every thing was already planned; the alliance with Muscovy signed, and the measures with Denmark agreed upon.

My inclinations, said he, after a pause, were always to serve Sweden, tho' the contrary opinion has prevailed. The elector of Brandenburg owed his title of king of Prussia to the services I did him, and when, in recompense, he would have given me a considerable sum of money, I thanked him, and rejected the offer, adding, that the reward I most wished for, was to regain the king of Sweden's favour by his intercession. This he promised, and tried every possible method to succeed, but without success After this I laboured so much for the interest of the late emperor in his Spanish affairs, that I brought about what scarce any other man could have affected: The Emperor, as an acknowledgment gave me an assignment for 50,000 crowns, which I humbly laid at his feet, and only implored his imperial majesty's recommendation of me to my king's favour: This request he immediately granted, and gave his orders accordingly, but in vain. Yet, not to lose any opportunity, I went to Moscow while the Swedish ambassadors were at that court, but even the mediation of the Czar had no effect. After that I distributed among the Swedish prisoners at Moscow, at least 100,000 crowns, to show the ardent desire I had, by all ways, to regain the favour of their sovereign. Would to heaven I had been equally in earnest to obtain the grace of God. — At these words another shower of tears fell from his eyes, and he remained for some moments silent, and overwhelmed with grief.

I used my best endeavours to comfort him, with the assurance that this grace would not be denied him, provided he spent the few hours still left, in earnestly imploring it: for the door of heaven's mercy was never shut, tho' that of men might be cruelly so. This, replied he, this is my consolation; for thou art God and not man to be angry for ever.

He then inveighed bitterly against Augustus, and reproached himself for having any connection with a wretch who was wholly destitute of all faith and honour, an atheist, without piety, and without virtue.

While he was at Warsaw, said he, and heard the king was advancing to attack him, he found himself extremely distressed. He was absolutely without money, and therefore obliged to dismiss some of his troops. He had recourse to my assistance, and intreated me, for the love of God, to borrow whatever sum I could. I procured him 400,000 crowns; 50,000 of which, the very next day, he squandered on trinkets, and jewels, which he gave in presents to some of his women. I told him plainly my thoughts of the matter; and by my importunity prevailed, that the Jews should take back their toys, and return the money they had been paid for them. The ladies were enraged; and he swore that I should, one time or other, suffer for what I had done; there indeed he kept his word. Would to God he had always done so with those he employed!

I now left him for a short time, and at seven in the evening I returned; and the officer being retired, he accosted me, with a smiling air, and an appearance of much tranquillity: — Welcome, dear Sir, the weight that lay heavy on my heart is removed, and I already feel a sensible change wrought in my mind. I am ready to die; death is more elegible than the solitude of a long imprisonment. Would to heaven only, that the kind of it were less cruel. Can you, my dear Sir, inform me in what manner I am to suffer? I answered, that it had not been communicated to me; but that I imagined it would pass ower without noise, as only the colonel and myself hand notice of it.

That, reply'd he, I esteem as a favour, but have you seen the sentence? Or must I die, without being either heard or condemned? My apprehensions are of being put to intollerable tortures. I comforted him in the kindest manner I could; but he was his own best comforter from the wort of God, with which he was particularly acquainted; quoting, among many other passages, the following, in Greek, We must enter into the kingdom of heaven thro' many tribulations.

He then called for pen and ink, and intreated me to write down what he should dictate. I did so, a follows:

Testamentum, or, my last Will, as to the disposition of my effects after my death.

I. His majesty, king Augustus, having first examined his conscience thoroughly, will be so just as to pay back to my relations the sum he owes me; which, being liquidated, will amount to 50,000 crowns; and as my relations are here in service of Sweden, that monarch will probably obtain it for them.

to

At this he ſaid, Let us ſtop here a little; I will quickly return to finiſh this will; but now let us addreſs ourſelves to God by prayer. Prayers being ended, "Now, cry'd he, I find myſelf yet better, yet in a quieter frame of mind. Oh! were my death leſs dreadful, with what pleaſure would I expiate my guilt by embracing it! —

Yes, cry'd he, after a pauſe, I have friends in different places, who will weep over my deplorable fate. What will the mother of the kin of Pruſſia ſay? What will be the grief of the Counteſs Levolde, who attends on her? But what thoughts muſt ariſe in the boſom of HER, to whom my faith is plighted? Unhappy woman! the news of my death will be fatal to her peace of mind. My dear paſtor, may I venture to beg one favour of you?„ I aſſured him he might command every ſervice in my power: "Have the goodneſs then, ſaid he, preſſing my hand, the moment I am no more, to write — Alas! how will you ſet about it? a letter to Madam Einſiedelern, the lady I am promiſed to — Let her know that I die her's; inform her fully of my unhappy fate! Send her my laſt and eternal farewell! My death is in truth diſgraceful; but my manner of meeting it will, I hope, by heaven's and your aſſiſtance, render it holy and bleſſed. This news will be her only conſolation. Add farther, dear Sir, that I thanked her with my lateſt breath, for the ſincere affection ſhe bore me: May ſhe live long and happy: This is my dying wiſh.„ — I gave him my hand in promiſe that I would faithfully perform all he deſired.

Afterwards he took up a book: "This, ſaid he, is of my own writing. Keep it in remembrance of me, and as a proof of my true regard for religion. I could wiſh it might have the good fortune to be preſented to the king, that he may be convinced, with what little foundation I have been accuſed of Atheiſm.„ Taking it from his hand I aſſured him, that my colonel would not fail to preſent it, as ſoon as opportunity offered.

The reſt of his time was employed in prayer, which he went thro' with a very fervent devotion.

On the 30th of September I was again with him at four in the morning. The moment he heard me, he aroſe, and rendering thanks to God, aſſured me he had not ſlept ſo ſoundly for a long time. We went to prayers, and in truth his piety, and devout frame of mind, were worthy of admiration.

About ſix he ſaid he would begin his confeſſion, before the din and clamour of the people without could riſe to diſturb his thoughts. He then kneeled down, and went thro' his confeſſion in a manner truly edifying.

The ſun beginning to appear above the horizon, he looked out of the window, ſaying, Salve feſta dies! This is my wedding-day. I looked, alas! for another, but this is the happier; for to day ſhall my ſoul be introduceed into the aſſembly of the bleſſed!

He then aſked me, whether I yet knew in what way he was to die? I anſwered, that I did not. He conjured me, not to forſake him; for that he ſhould find in my company ſome conſolation even in the midſt of tortures.

Caſting his eye on the paper that lay on the table, This will, ſaid he, can never be finiſhed. I aſked him, whether he would put his name to what was already written? No, replied he, with a deep ſigh, I will write that hated name no more. My relations will find their account in another place; ſalute them from me.

He then addreſſed himſelf again to God in prayer, and continued his devotions till the lieutenant entered to conduct him to the coach. He wrapped himſelf up in his cloak, and went forward a great pace, guarded by 100 horſemen. Being arrived at the place of execution, we found it ſurrounded by 300 foot ſoldiers; but at the ſight of the ſtakes and wheels, his horror is not to be deſcribed. Claſping me in his arms, Beg of God, he exclaimed, that my ſoul may not be thrown into deſpair, amidſt theſe tortures! I comforted, I adjured him to fix his thoughts on the death of Jeſus Chriſt, who, for our ſins, was nailed to a croſs.

Being now on the ſpot where he was to ſuffer, he bid the executioner to do his duty well, and put into his hands ſome money, which he got ready for that purpoſe. He then ſtretched himſelf out upon the wheel; and while they were ſtripping him naked, he begged me to pray that God would have mercy on him, and bear up his ſoul in agony. I did ſo; and turning to all the ſpectators, ſaid to them. "Brethren, join with me in prayer for this unhappy man. Yes, cry'd he, aſſiſt me all of you with your ſupplications to heaven.

Here

Here the executioner gave him the first stroke. His cries were terrible. O Jesus! Jesus, have mercy upon me. This cruel scene was much lengthened out, and of the utmost horror; for as the headsman had no skill in his business, the unhappy victim received upwards of 15 different blows, with each of which were intermixed the most piteous groans, and invocations of the name of God. At length, after two strokes given on the breast, his strength and voice failed him. In a faultring dying tone, he was just heard to say, Cut off my head! and the executioner still lingering, he himself placed his head on the scaffold: After four strokes with an hatchet, the head was separated from the body, and the body quartered. Such was the end of the renowned Patkul; and may God have mercy on his soul!

LORENS HAGAR,
Chaplain of a Regiment.

THE STORY OF LE FEVER. *)

It was some time in the summer of that year, in which Dendermond was taken by the allies, — which was about seven years before my father came into the country, — and about as many, after the time, that my uncle Toby and Trim had privately decamped from my father's house in town, in order to lay some of the finest sieges to some of the finest fortified places in Europe — when my uncle Toby was one evening getting his supper, with Trim sitting behind him at a small sideboard, that the landlord of a little inn in the village came into the parlour with an empty phial in his hand, to beg a glass or two of sack; 'Tis for a poor gentleman, — I think of the army, said the landlord, who has been taken ill at my house four days ago, and has never held up his head since, or had a desire to taste any thing, till just now, that he has a fancy for a glass of sack and a thin toast, — I think, says he, taking his hand from his forehead, it would comfort me. ——

— If I could neither beg, borrow, or buy such a thing, — added the landlord — I would almost steal it for the poor

*) The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy (by Mr. Sterne) Lond. 1763-66. 9 Vol. 8. Altenburg 1772. 6 Vol. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0165
DFG

gentleman, he is so ill. — I hope in God he will still mend, continued he, — we are all of us concerned for him.

Thou art a good-natured soul, I will answer for thee, cried my uncle Toby; and thou shalt drink the poor gentleman's health in a glass of sack thyself, — and take a couple of bottles, with my service, and tell him he is heartily welcome to them, and to a dozen more, if they will do him good.

Though I am persuaded, said my uncle Toby, as the landlord shut the door, he is a very compassionate fellow — Trim, — yet I cannot help entertaining a high opinion of his guest too; there must be something more than common in him, that in so short a time should win so much upon the affections of his host: — And of his whole family, added the corporal, for they are all concerned for him. — Step after him, said my uncle Toby, — do Trim, — and ask if he knows his name.

— I have quite forgot it, truly, said the landlord, coming back into the parlour with the corporal, — but I can ask his son again: —— Has he a son with him then? said my uncle Toby — A boy, replied the landlord, of about eleven or twelve years of age; — but the poor creature has tasted almost as little as his father; he does nothing but mourn and lament for him night and day: — He has not stirred from the bed-side these two days.

My uncle Toby laid down his knife and fork, and thrust his plate from before him, as the landlord gave him the account; and Trim; without being ordered, took away without saying one word.

Trim! said my uncle Toby, I have a project in my head, as it is a bad night, of wrapping myself up warm in my roquelaure, and paying a visit to this poor gentleman. — Your honour's roquelaure, replied the corporal, has not one been had on, since the night before your honour received your wound, when we mounted guard in the trenches before the gate of St. Nicholas; — and, besides, it is so cold and rainy a night, that what with the roquelaure, and what with the weather, 'twill be enough to give your honour your death, and bring on your honour's torment in your groin. I fear so; replied my uncle Toby, but I am not at rest in my mind, Trim, since the account the landlord has given me. — I wish I had not known so much of this affair, — added my uncle Toby, — or that I had known more of it: —— How shall we manage it? Leave it, an't please your honour, to me, me, quoth the corporal; I'll take my hat and ſtick and go to the houſe and reconnoitre, and act accordingly; and I will bring your honour a full account in an hour. — Thou ſhalt go, Trim, ſaid my uncle Toby, and here's a ſhilling for thee to drink with his ſervant. — I ſhall get it all out of him, ſaid the corporal, ſhutting the door.

It was not till my uncle Toby had knocked the aſhes out of his third pipe, that corporal Trim returned from the inn, and gave him the following account:

I deſpaired at firſt, ſaid the corporal, of being able to bring back any intelligence to your honour, about the lieutenant and his ſon; for when I aſked where his ſervant was, from whom I made myſelf ſure of knowing every thing which was proper to be aſked, — I was anſwered, that he had no ſervant with him; — that he had come to the inn with hired horſes, which, upon finding himſelf unable to proceed, to join, I ſuppoſe, the regiment, he had diſmiſſed the morning after he came. — If I get better, my dear, ſaid he, as he gave his purſe to his ſon to pay the man, — we can hire horſes from hence. — But alas! the poor gentleman will never get from hence, ſaid the landlady to me, — for I heard the death-watch all night long; and when he dies, the youth, his ſon, will certainly die with him; for he is broken-hearted already.

I was hearing this account, continued the corporal, when the youth came into the kitchen, to order the thin toaſt the landlord ſpoke of; — but I will do it for my father myſelf, ſaid the youth. — Pray let me ſave you the trouble, young gentleman, ſaid I, taking up a fork for the purpoſe, and offering him my chair to ſit down upon by the fire, whilſt I did it. — I believe, Sir, ſaid he, very modeſtly, I can pleaſe him beſt myſelf. — I am ſure, ſaid I, his honour will not like the toaſt the worſe for being toaſted by an old ſoldier. — The youth took hold of my hand, and inſtantly burſt into tears. — Poor youth! ſaid my uncle Toby, — he has been bred up from an infant in the army; and the name of a ſoldier, Trim, ſounded in his ears like the name of a friend; — I wiſh I had him here.

— I never, in the longeſt march, ſaid the corporal, had ſo dread a mind to my dinner, as I had to cry with him for company: — What could be the matter with me, an't pleaſe your honour? Nothing in the world, Trim, ſaid

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0167
DFG

my uncle Toby, blowing his nose, — but that thou art a good-natured fellow

When I gave him the toast, continued the corporal, I thought it was proper to tell him I was Captain Shandy's servant, and that your honour, (thought a stranger) was extremely concerned for his father; — and that if there was any thing in your house, or cellar — (And thou might'st have added my purse too, said my uncle Toby) — he was heartily welcome to it: — He made a very low bow, (which was meant to your honour) but no answer, — for his heart was full — so he went up stairs with the toast; — I warrant you, my dear, said I, as I opened the kitchen-door, your father will be well again. — Mr. Yorick's curate was smoaking a pipe by the kitchen-fire, — but said not a word good or bad to comfort the youth. — I thought it wrong, added the corporal. — I think so too, said my uncle Toby.

When the lieutenant had taken his glass of sack and toast, he felt himself a little revived, and sent down into the kitchen, to let me know, that in about ten minutes he should be glad if I would step up stairs, — I believe, said the landlord, he is going to say his prayers, — for there was a book laid upon the chair by his bed side, and as I shut the door, I saw his son take up a cushion. —

I thought, said the curate, that you gentlemen of the army, Mr. Trim, never said your prayers at all. — I heard the poor gentleman say his prayers last night, said the landlady, very devoutly, and with my own ears, or I could not have believed it. — Are you sure of it? replied the curate. — A soldier, an't please your reverence, said I, prays as often (of his own accord) as a parson; — and when he is fighting for his king, and for his own life, and for his honour too, he has the most reason to pray to God, of any one in the whole world — 'Twas well said of thee, Trim, said my uncle Toby. — But when a soldier, said I, an't please your reverence, has been standing for twelve hours together in the trenches, up to his knees in cold water, — or engaged, said I, for months together in long and dangerous marches, — harrassed, perhaps, in his rear to-day; — harrassing others to-morrow; — detached here; — countermanded there; — resting this night out upon his arms; beat up it his shirt the next; — benumbed in his joints; — perhaps without straw in his tent to kneel on; — says his prayers how and when he can. I believe, said I, — for I was piqued, piqued, quoth the corporal, for the reputation of the army, — I believe an't pleaſe your reverence, ſaid I, that when a ſoldier gets time to pray — he prays as heartily as a parſon, — tho' not with all his fuſs and hypocriſy. — Thou ſhould'ſt not have ſaid that, Trim, ſaid my uncle Toby, — for God only knows who is a hypocrite, and who is not. —

When I went up, continued the corporal, into the lieutenant's room, which I did not do till the expiration of the ten minutes, — he was lying in his bed with his head raiſed upon his hand, with his elbow upon the pillow, and a clean white cambrick handkerchief beſide it: — The youth was juſt ſtooping down to take up the cuſhion, upon which I ſuppoſed he had been kneeling, — the book was laid upon the bed, — and as he roſe, in taking up the cuſhion with one hand, he reached out his other to take it away at the ſame time. — Let it remain, there, my dear, ſaid the lieutenant.

He did not offer to ſpeak to me, till I had walked up cloſe to his bed-ſide: — If you are Capt. Shandy's ſervant, ſaid he, you muſt preſent my thanks to your maſter, with my little boy's thanks along with them, for his courteſy to me; — if he was of Levens's — ſaid the lieutenant. I told him your honour was — then, ſaid he, I ſerved three campaigns with him in Flanders, and remember him, — but 'tis moſt likely, as I had not the honour of any acquaintance with him, that he knows nothing of me. — You will tell him, however, that the perſon his good nature has laid under obligations to him, is one Le Fever, a lieutenant in Auguſ's — but he knows me not, — ſaid he, a ſecond time, muſing; — poſſibly he may my ſtory — added he — pray tell the captain, I was the enſign at Breda, whoſe wife was unfortunately killed with a muſket ſhot, at ſhe lay in my arms in my tent. — I remember the ſtory, an't pleaſe your honour, ſaid I, very well. — Do you ſo? ſaid he, wiping his eyes with his handkerchief, — then well may I. — In ſaying this, he drew a little ring out of his boſom, which ſeemed tied with a black ribband about his neck, and kiſs'd it twice — here, Billy, ſaid he, — the boy flew acroſs the room to the bed ſide, — and falling down upon his knee, took the ring in his hand, and kiſſed it too, — then kiſſed his father, and ſat down upon the bed and wept.

I wiſh ſaid my uncle Toby, with a deep ſigh, — I wiſh, Trim, I was aſleep.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0169
DFG

Your honour, replied the corporal, is too much concerned; -- ſhall I pour your honour out a glaſs of ſack to your pipe? — Do, Trim, ſaid my uncle Toby.

I remember, ſaid my uncle Toby, ſighing again, the ſtory of the enſign and his wife, with a circumſtance his modeſty omitted; — and particularly well that he, as well as ſhe, upon ſome account or other, (I forgot what) was univerſally pitied by the whole regiment; — but finiſh the ſtory thou art upon: — 'Tis finiſhed already, ſaid the corporal, — for I could ſtay no longer, — ſo wiſhed his honour a good night; young Le Fever roſe from off the bed, and ſaw me to the bottom of the ſtairs, and as we went down together, told me, they came from Ireland, and were on their route to join the regiment in Flandern. — But alas! ſaid the corporal, — the lieutenant's laſt day's march is over. — Then what is to become of his poor boy? cried my uncle Toby. But Trim, when thou madeſt an offer of my ſervices to Le Fever, as ſickneſs and travelling are expenſive, and thou knoweſt he was but a poor lieutenant, with a ſon to ſubſiſt as well as himſelf, out of his pay, — why didſt thou not make an offer to him of my purſe; — and when thou offeredſt him whatever was in my houſe, — why didſt thou not offer him my houſe too: — A ſick brother officer ſhould have the beſt quarters, Trim, and if we had him with us, in a fortnight or three weeks he might march. — He will never march, an't pleaſe your honour, in this world, ſaid the corporal: — — He will march; ſaid my uncle Toby riſing up from the ſide of the bed, with one ſhoe off: — An't pleaſe your honour, in this world, ſaid the corporal, he will never march, but to his grave: — He ſhall march, cried my uncle Toby, marching the foot which had a ſhoe on, thought without advancing an inch, — he ſhall march to his regiment. — He cannot ſtand it, ſaid the corporal; — he ſhall be ſupported, ſaid my uncle Toby; — he'll drop at laſt, ſaid the corporal, and what will become of his boy? — He ſhall not drop, ſaid my uncle Toby, firmly. — A-well-o'day, — do what we can for him, ſaid Trim, maintaining his point, — the poor ſoul will die: — He ſhall not die, by G —, cried my uncle Toby.

— The accuſing ſpirit which flew up to heaven's chancery with the oath, bluſhed as he gave it in; — and the recording angel as he wrote it down, dropp'd a tear upon the word, and blotted it out for ever.

— My

— My uncle Toby went to his bureau, — put his purſe into his breeches pocket, and having ordered the corporal to go early in the morning for a phyſician, — he went to bed, and fell aſleep. —

My uncle Toby, roſe up an hour before his wonted time, and entering the lieutenant's room, without preface or apology, ſat himſelf down upon the chair by the bed-ſide, and independently of all modes and cuſtoms, opened the curtain in the manner an old friend and brother officer would have done it, and aſked him how he did, — how he had reſted in the night, — what was his complaint, — where was his pain, — and what he could do to help him: — and without giving him time to anſwer any of the enquiries, went on and told him of a little plan which he had been concerting with the corporal the night before for him.

— You ſhall go home directly, Le Fever, ſaid my uncle Toby, to my houſe, — and we'll ſend for a doctor to ſee what's the matter, and we'll have an apothecary, — and the corporal ſhall be your nurſe; — and I'll be your ſervant, Le Fever.

— The blood and ſpirits of Le Fever, which were waxing cold and ſlow within him, and were retreating to their laſt citadel, the heart, — rallied back, — the film forſook his eyes for a moment, — he looked up wiſhfully in my uncle Toby's face, — then caſt a look upon his boy, — and that ligament, fine as it was, — was never broken. —

Nature inſtantly ebb'd again, — the film returned to its place, — the pulſe fluttered—ſtopp'd—went on—throb'd—ſtopp'd again—moved—ſtopp'd—ſhall I go on? — No.

— All that is neceſſary to be added is as follows: —

That my uncle Toby, with young le Fever in his hand, attended the poor lieutenant, as chief mourners, to his grave.—

When my uncle Toby had turned every thing into money, and ſettled all accounts betwixt the agent of the regiment and Le Fever, and betwixt Le Fever and all mankind, — there remained nothing more in my uncle Toby's hands, than an old regimental coat and a ſword; ſo that my uncle Toby found little or no oppoſition, from the world in taking adminiſtration. The coat my uncle Toby gave the corporal; — wear it, Trim, ſaid my uncle Toby, as long as it will hold together, for the ſake of the poor lieutenant — and this, — ſaid my uncle Toby, taking up the ſword in his hand, and drawing it out of the ſcabbard as he ſpoke—and this, Le Fever, I'll ſave for thee, 'tis all the fortune, continued my uncle Toby, hanging it upon a crook, and pointing to it, — 'tis all the fortune, my dear Le Fever, which God has left thee: but if he has given thee a heart to fight thy way with it in the world, — and thou doeſt it like a man of honour; — 'tis enough for us.

for

As ſoon as my uncle Toby had laid a foundation, and taught him to inſcribe a regular polygon in a circle, he ſent him to a public ſchool, where, excepting Whitſuntide and Chriſtmas, at which times the corporal was punctually diſpatched for him, — he remained to the ſpring of the year, ſeventeen; when the ſtory of the Emperor's ſending his army into Hungary againſt the Turks, kindling a ſpark of fire in his boſom, he left his Greek and Latin without leave, and throwing himſelf upon his knees before my uncle Toby, begged his father's ſword, and my uncle Toby's leave along with it, to go and try his fortune under Eugene. — Twice did my uncle Toby forget his wound, an cry out, Le Fever! I will go with thee, and thou ſhalt fight beſide me — and twice he laid his hand upon his groin, and hung down his head in ſorrow and diſconſolation.

My uncle Toby took down the ſword from the crook, where it had hung untouched ever ſince the lieutenant's death, and delivered it to the corporal to brighten up; — and having detained Le Fever a ſingle fornight to equip him and contract for his paſſage to Leghorn, — he put the ſword in his hand, — if thou art brave, Le Fever, ſaid my uncle Toby, this will not fail thee, — but fortune, ſaid he, muſing a little, — fortune may — and if ſhe does, added my uncle Toby, come back again to me, Le Fever, and we will ſhape thee another courſe.

The greateſt injury could not have oppreſſed the heart of Le Fever more than my uncle Toby's paternal kindneſs; — he parted from my uncle Toby, as the beſt of ſons from the beſt of fathers — both dropped tears — and as my uncle Toby gave him, his laſt kiſs, he ſlipped ſixty guineas tied up in an old purſe of his father's, in which was his mother's ring, into his hand, — and bid God bleſs him.

Le Fever got up to the imperial army juſt time enough to try what metal his ſword was made of, at the defeat of the Turks before Belgrade; but a ſeries of unmerited miſchances had purſued him from that moment, and trod cloſe upon his heels for four years together after: he had withſtood theſe buf-buffetings to the laſt, till ſickneſs overtook him at Marſeilles, from whence he wrote my uncle Toby word, he had loſt his time, his ſervices, his health, and, in ſhort, every thing but his ſword; — and was waiting for the firſt ſhip to return back to him.

ACCOUNT OF THE CARDINAL XIMENES. *)

The ſingular character of this man, and the extraordinary qualities which marked him out for that office, at ſuch a juncture, merit a particular deſcription. He was deſcended of an honourable, not of a wealthy family; and the circumſtances of his parents, as well as his own inclinations, having determined him to enter into the church, he early obtained benefices of great value, and which placed him in the way of the higheſt preferment. All theſe, however, he renounced at once; and after undergoing a very ſevere noviciate, aſſumed the habit of St. Francis in a monaſtery of obſervantine friars, one of the moſt rigid orders in the Romiſh church. There he ſoon became eminent for his uncommon auſterity of manners, and for thoſe exceſſes of ſuperſtitious devotion, which are the proper characteriſtics of the monaſtic life. But notwithſtanding theſe extravagancies, to which weak and enthuſiaſtic minds alone are uſually prone, his underſtanding, naturally penetrating and deciſive, retained its fulls vigour, and acquired him ſuch great authority among his own order, as raiſed him to be their provincial. His reputation for ſanctity ſoon procured him the office of father confeſſor to the queen Iſabella, which he accepted with the utmoſt reluctance. He preſerved in a court the ſame auſterity of manners, which had diſtinguiſhed him in the cloiſter. He continued to make all his journies on foot; he ſubſiſted only upon alms; his acts of mortification were as ſevere as ever; and his pennances as rigorous. Iſabella, pleaſed with her choice, confered on him, not long after, the archbiſhoprick of Toledo, which, next to the papacy, is the richeſt dignity in the church of Rome.

This

*) Wm. Robertſon's Hiſtory of the Reign of the Emperor Charles V. London 1769. 4.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0173
DFG

This honour he declined with a firmneſs, which nothing but the authoritative injunction of the pope was able to overcome. Nor did this height of promotion change his manners. Though obliged to display in public that magnificence which became his ſtation, he himſelf retained his monaſtic ſeverity. Under his pontifical robes he conſtantly wore the coarſe frock of St. Francis, the rents in which he uſed to patch with his own hands. He at no time uſed linen; but was commonly clad in hair-cloth. He ſlept always in his habit, moſt frequently on the ground, or on boards, rarely in a bed. He did not taſte any of the delicatiſes whith appeared at his table. But ſatisfied himſelf with that ſimple diet which the rule of his order preſcribed. Notwithſtanding theſe peculiarities, ſo contrary to the manners of the world, he poſſeſſed a thorough knowledge of its affairs; and no ſooner was he called by his ſtation, and by the high opinion which Ferdinand and Iſabella entertained of him, to take a principal ſhare in the adminiſtration, than he diſplayed talents for buſineſs, which rendered the fame of his wisdom equal to that of his ſanctity. Bold and original in all his plans, his political conduct flowed from his real character, and partook both of its virtues and its defects. His extenſive genius ſuggeſted to him ſchemes, vaſt and magnificent. Conſcious of the integrity of his intentious, he purſued theſe with unremitting and undaunted firmneſs. Accuſtomed from his early youth to mortify his own paſſions, he ſhewed little indulgence towards thoſe of other men. Taught by his ſyſtem of religion to check even his moſt innocent deſires, he was the enemy of every thing which he could affix the name of elegance and pleaſure; and, though free from any ſuſpicion of cruelty, he diſcovered in all his commerce with the world a ſevere inflexibility of mind, and auſterity of character, peculiar to the monaſtic profeſſion, and which can ſcarce be conceived in a country where that is unknown.

Account
of the famous battle of Pavia in 1525 where King FRANCIS I. was taken prisoner. *)

The imperial generals found the French so strongly entranched, that notwithstanding the powerful motives which urged them on, they hesitated lond before they ventured to attack them; but at last the necessities of the besieged, and the murmurs of their own soldiers obliged them to put every thing to hazard. Never dit armies engage with greater ardour, or with an higher opinion of the importance of the battle they were going to fight; never were troops more strongly animated with emulation, national antipathy, mutual resentment, and all the passions which inspire obstinate bravery. On the one hand, a gallant young monarch, seconded by a generous nobility, and followed by subjects to whose natural impetuosity, indignation at the opposition they had encountered, added new force, contended for victory and honour. On the other side, troops more completely disciplined, and conducted by generals of greater abilities, fought from necessity, with courage heightened by despair. The Imperialists however, were unable to resist the first efforts of the French valour, and their firmest battalions began to give way. But the fortune of the day was quickly changed. The Swiss in the service of France, unmindful of the reputation of their country for fidelity and martial glory, abandoned their post in a cowardly manner. Leyva, with his garrison, sallied out and attacked the rear of the French, during the heat of the action, with such fury as threw it into confusion; and Pescara falling on their cavalry, with the Imperial horse, among whom he had prudently intermingled a considerable number of Spanish foot, armed with the heavy muskets then in use, broke this formidable body by an unusual method of attack against which they were wholly unprovided. The rout became universal; and resistance ceased in almost every part, but where the king was in person, who fought now, not for fame or victory, but for safety. Though wounded in several places, and thrown from his horse which was killed under him,

Francis

*) Robertson's History of the Reign of the Emperor Charles V.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0175
DFG

Francis defended himself on foot with an heroic courage. Many of his braveſt officers gathering round him, endeavouring to ſave his life at the expence of their own, fell at his feet. Among theſe was Bonnivet, the autor of this great calamity, who alone died unlamented. The king exhauſted with fatigue, and ſcarce capable of farther reſiſtance, was left almoſt alone, expoſed to the fury of ſome Spaniſh ſoldiers, ſtrangers to his rank and enraged at his obſtinacy. At that moment came up Pomperant, a French gentleman, who had entered together with Bourbon into the Emperor's ſervice, and placing himſelf by the ſide of the monarch againſt whom he had rebelled, aſſiſted in protecting him from the violence of the ſoldiers; at the ſame time beſeeching him to ſurrender to Bourbon, who was not far diſtant. Imminent as the danger was which now ſurrounded Francis, he rejected with indignation the thoughts of an action which would have afforded ſuch matter of triumph to his traiterous ſubject; and calling for Lannoy, who happened likewiſe to be near at hand, gave up his ſword to him; which he, kneeling to kiſs the king's hand, received with profound reſpect; and taking his own ſword from his ſide, preſented it to him, ſaying, that it did not become ſo great a monarch to remain diſarmed in the preſence of one of the Emperor's ſubjects.

Ten thouſand men fell on this day, one of the moſt fatal France had ever ſeen. Among theſe were many noblemen of the higheſt diſtinction, who choſe rather to periſh than to turn their backs with diſhonour. Not a few were taken priſoners, of whom the moſt illuſtrious was Henry D'Albret, the unfortunate king of Navarre.

A ſmall body of the rear-guard made its eſcape under the command of the duke Alenſon; the feeble garriſon of Milan on the firſt news of the defeat, retired whitout being purſued by another road; and in two weeks after the battle, not a Frenchman remained in Italy.

Lannoy, though he treaded Francis with all the outward marks of honour due to his rank and character, guarded him with the utmoſt attention. He was ſolicitous, not only to prevent any poſſibility of his eſcaping, but afraid that his own troops might ſeize his perſon, and detain it as the beſt ſecurity for the payment of their arrears. In order to provide againſt both theſe dangers, he coducted Francis, the day after the battle, to the ſtrong caſtle of Pizzichitone near Cremona, committing him to the cuſtody of Don Ferdinand Alarcon, general general of the Spaniſh infantry, and officer of great bravery, and of ſtrict honour, but remarkable for that ſevere and ſcrupulous vigilance which ſuch a truſt required.

Meanwhile Francis, who formed a judgment of the Emperor's diſpoſitions by his own, was extremely deſirous that Charles ſhould be informed of his ſituation, fondly hoping that from his generoſity or ſimpathy, he would obtain ſpeedy relief. The Imperial generals were no leſs impatient to give their ſovereign an early account of the deciſive victory which they had gained, and to receive his inſtructions with regard to their future conduct. As the moſt certain and expeditious method of conveying intelligence to Spain, at that ſeaſon of the year, was by land, Francis gave the Commendador Pennaloſa, who was charged with Lannoy's diſpatches, a paſsport to travel trough France.

Charles received the account of this ſignal and unexpected ſucceſs that had crowned his arms, with a moderation, which if it hat been real, would have done him more honour than the greateſt victory. Without uttering one word expreſſive of exultation, or of intemperate joy, he retired immediately into his chapel, and having ſpent an hour in offering up his thanksgivings to heaven, returned to the preſence-chamber, which by that time was filled with grandees and foreign Ambaſſadors, aſſembled in order to congratulate him: he accepted of their compliments with a modeſt deportment; he lamented the misfortune of the captive king, as a ſtriking example of the ſad reverſe of fortune, to which the moſt powerful monarchs are ſubject; he forbad any public rejoicings, as indecent in a war carried on among Chriſtians, reſerving them until he ſhould obtain a victory equally illuſtrious over the Infidels; and ſeemed to take pleaſure in the advantage he had gained, only as it would prove the occaſion of reſtoring peace to Chriſtendom.

Charles, however, had already begun to form ſchemes in his own mind, which little ſuited ſuch external appearences. Ambition, not generoſity, was the ruling paſſion in his mind; and the victory at Pavia opened ſuch new and unbounded proſpects of gratifying it, as aſſured him with irreſiſtible force; but it being no eaſy matter to execute the vaſt deſigns which he meditated, he thought it neceſſary, while propre meaſures were taking for that purpoſe, to affect the greateſt moderation, hoping under that veil to conceal his real intentions from the other princes of Europe.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0177
DFG

Meanwhile France was filled with consternation. The King himself had early transmitted an account of the rout at Pavia in a letter to his mother delivered by Pennaloſa, which contained only these words, "Madam, all is loſt, except our honour." Thoſe who ſurvived, when they arrived from Italy, brought ſuch a melancholy detail of particulars as made all ranks of men ſenſibly feel the greatneſs and extent of the calamity.

After the moſt unfeeling and unprincely treatment of his royal captive, Charles at length ſet him at liberty, having firſt made him ſign a rigorous treaty.

By this treaty, Charles flattered himſelf that he had not only effectually humbled his rival, but that he had taken ſuch precautions as would for ever prevent his re-attaining any formidable degree of power. The opinion, which the wiſeſt politicians formed concerning it, was very different; they could not perſuade themſelves that Francis, after obtaining his liberty, would execute theſe articles againſt which he had ſtruggled ſo long, and to which even amidſt the horrors of captivity he had conſented with ſuch reluctance. Ambition and reſentment, they knew, would conſpire in prompting him to violate the hard conditions, to which he had been conſtrained to ſubmit; nor would arguments and caſuiſtry be wanting to repreſent that which was ſo manifeſtly advantageous, to be neceſſary and juſt. If one part of Francis's conduct had been known, at that time, this opinion might have been founded, not in conjecture, but in certainty. A few hours before he ſigned the treaty, he aſſembled ſuch of his counſellors as were then in Madrid, and having exacted from them a ſolemn oath of ſecrecy, he made a long enumeration in their preſence of all the diſhonourable arts, as well as unprincely rigour, which the Emperor had employed in order to enſnare and intimidate him. For that reaſon, he took a formal proteſt in the hands of notaries, that his conſent to the treaty ſhould be conſidered as an involuntary deed, and be deemed null and void. By this diſingenuous artifice, for which even the treatment he had met with was no apology, Francis endeavoured to ſatisfy his honour and conſcience in ſigning the treaty, and to provide at the ſame time a pretext on which to break it.

CHA-

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0178
DFG

CHARACTER OF THE EMPEROR CHARLES V. *)

As Charles was the first prince of the age in rank and dignity, the part which he acted, whether we consider the greatness, the variety, or the success of his undertakings, was the most conspicuous. It is from an attentive observation of his conduct, not from the exaggerated praises of the Spanish historians, or the undistinguishing censure of the French, that a just idea of Charles's genius and abilities is to be collected. He possessed qualities so peculariar, as strongly mark his character, and not only distinguish him from the princes who were his contemporaries, but account for that superioty over them which he so long maintained. In forming his schemes, he was, by nature, as well as by habit, cautious and considerate.

Born with talents, which unfolded themselves slowly, and were late in attaining maturity, he was accustomed to ponder every subject that demanded his consideration with a careful and deliberate attention. He bent the whole force of his mind towards it, and dwelling upon it with a serious application, undiverted by pleasure, and hardly relaxed by any amusement, he revolved it, in silence, in his own breast.

He then communicated the matter to his ministers, and after hearing their opinions, took his resolution with a decisive firmness, which seldom follows such slow consultations. In consequence of this, Charles's measures, instead of resembling the desultory and irregular sallies of Henry VIII. or Francis I. had the apperance of a consistent system, in which all the parts were arranged, the effects were foreseen, and the accidents were provided for. His promptitude in execution was no less remarkable than his patience in deliberation. He consulted with phlegm, but he acted with vigour; and did not discover greater sagacity in his choice of the measures which it was proper to pursue, than fertility of genius in finding out the means for rendering his pursuit of them successful. Though he had naturally so little of the martial turn, that during the most ardent and bustling period of life, he remained in the cabinet inactive, yet when he chose at length to appear at the head of his army, his mind was so formed for vigorous exertions in every direction, that he acquired such knowledge in the art of war, and such talents for command, as rendered him equal in reputation and success to the most able generals of the age. But Charles possessed, in the most eminent degree, the science which is of the greatest importance to a monarch, that of knowing men, and of adapting their talents to the various departements which he allotted to them. From the death of Chievres to the end of his reign, he employed no general in the field, no minister in the cabinet, no ambassador to a foreign court, no governor of a province, whose abilities were inadequate to the trust reposed in them. Though destitute of that bewitching affability of manners, which gained Francis the hearts of all who approached his person, he was no stranger to the virtues which secure fidelity and attachment. He placed unbounded confidence in his generals; he rewarded their services with munificence; he neither envied their fame, nor discovered any jealousy of their power. Almost all the generals who conducted his armies may be placed on a level with those illustrious personages, who have attained the highest eminence of military glory; and his advantages over his rivals are to be ascribed so manifestly to the superior abilities of the commanders whom he set in opposition to them, that this might seem to detract, in some degree, from his own merit, if the talent of discovering and employing such instruments were not the most undoubted proof of a capacity for government.

*) Robertson's History &c.

There were, nevertheless, defects in his political character which must considerably abate the admiration due to his extraordinary talents. Charles's ambition was insatiable, and though there seems to be no foundation for an opinion prevalent in his own age, that he had formed the chimerical project of establishing an universal monarchy in Europe, it is certain that his desire of being distinguished as a conqueror involved him in continual wars, which exhausted and oppressed his subjects, and left him little leisure for giving attention to the interior police and improvement of his kingdoms, the great objects of every prince who makes the happiness of his people the end of his government. Charles, at a very early period of life, having added the Imperial crown to the kingdoms of Spain, and to the hereditary dominions of the houses of Austria and Burgundy, this opened to him such a vast field of enterprize, and engaged him in schemes so complicated as well as arduous, that feeling his power to be unequal to the execution of these, he had often recourse to low artifices unbecoming unbecoming his superior talents, and sometimes ventured on such deviations from integrity as were dishonourable in a great prince. His insidious and fraudulent policy appeared more conspicuous, and was rendered more odious, by a comparison with the open and undesigning character of his contemporaries Francis I. and Henry VIII. This difference, though occasioned chiefly by the diversity of their tempers, must be ascribed, in some degree to such an opposition in the principles of their political conduct as affords some excuse for this defect in Charles's behaviour, though it cannot serve as a justification of it. Francis and Henry seldom acted but from the impulse of their passions, and rushed headlong towards the object in view. Charles's measures being the result of cool reflection, were disposed into a regular system, and carried on upon a concerted plan. Persons who act in the former manner naturally pursue the end in view without assuming any disguise, or displaying much address. Such as hold the latter course, are apt, in forming as well as in executing their designs, to employ such refinements, as always lead to artifice in conduct, and often degenerate into deceit.

A SATIRICAL DESCRIPTION OF LONDON AND BATH. *)

In London, I am pent up in frowzy lodgings, where there is not room enough to swing a cat; and I breathe the steams of endless putrefaction; and these would, undoubtedly, produce a pestilence, if they were not qualified by the gross acid of sea coal, which is itself a pernicious nuisance to lungs of any delicacy of texture: but even this boasted corrector cannot prevent those languid, fallow looks, that distinguish the inhabitants of London from those ruddy swains that lead a country-life — I go to bed after midnight, jaded and restless from the dissipations of the day — I start every hour from my sleep, at the horrid noise of the watchman bawling the hour trough every street, and thundering at every door; a set of useless fellows, who serve no other purpose but that of disturbing the repose of the inhabitants; and by five o'clock I ſtart out of bed, in conſequence of the ſtill more dreadful alarm made by the country carts, and noiſy ruſtics bellowing green peaſe under my window. If I would drink water, I muſt quaff the mawkiſh contents of an open aqueduct, expoſed to all manner of defilement; or ſwallow that which comes from the river Thames, impregnated with all the filth of London and Weſtminſter — Mud and mire are the leaſt offenſive parts of the concrete, which is compoſed of all the drugs, minerals, and poiſons, uſed in mechanics and manufactures, enriched with the putrefying carcaſes of beaſts and men; and mixed with the ſcourings of all the waſh-tubs, kennels, and common ſewers, within the bills of Mortality.

*) The Expedition of Humphry Clinker by the Autor of Roderic Random, (Dr. Smollet) Lond. 1771. 3. Vol. 12.

This is the agreable potation, extolled by the Londoners, as the fineſt water in the univerſe. — As to the intoxicating potion, ſold for wine, it is a vile, unpalatable, and pernicious ſophiſtication, balderdaſhed with cyder, corn-ſpirit, and the juice of ſloes. In an action at law, laid againſt a carman for having ſtaved a caſk of port, it appeared from the evidence of the cooper, that there were not above five gallons of real wine in the whole pipe, which held above a hundred, and even that had been brewed and adulterated by the merchant at Oporto. The bread I eat in London, is a deleterious paſte, mixed up with chalk, allum, and bone aſhes; inſipid to the taſte, and deſtructive to the conſtitution. The good people are not ignorant of this adulteration; but they prefer it to wholeſome bread, becauſe wither than the meal of corn: it is thus they ſacrifice their taſte and their health, and the lives of their tender infants, to a moſt abſurd gratification of a miſ-judging eye; and the miller, or the baker, is obliged to poiſon them and their families, in order to live by his profeſſion. The ſame monſtrous depravity appears in their veal, which is bleached by repeated bleedings, and other villainous arts, till there is not a drop of juice left in the body, and the poor animal is paralytic before it dies; ſo void of all taſte, nouriſhment, and ſavour, that a man might dine as comfortably on a white fricaſee of kidſkin gloves, or chip hats from Leghorn.

As they have diſcharged the natural colour from their bread, their butchersmeat, and poultry, their cutlets, ragouts, fricaſees, add ſauces of all kinds; ſo they inſiſt upon having the complexion of their pot-herbs mended, even at the hazard of their lives. Perhaps, you will hardly believe they can be ſo mad as to boil their greens with braſs half-pence, in order to improve their colour; and yet nothing is more true — Indeed, without this improvement in the colour, they have no perſonal merit. They are produced in an artificial ſoil, and taſte of nothing but the dunghills, from whence they ſpring. My cabbage, cauliflowers, and aſparagus in the country, are as much ſuperior in flavour to thoſe that are ſold in Covent-garden, as my heath mutton is to that of St. James's market; which, in fact, is neither lamb nor mutton, but ſomething betwixt the two, gorged in the rank fens of Lincoln and Eſſex, pale, coarſe, and frowzy — As for the pork, it is the fleſh of an abominable carnivorous animal, fed with horſe-fleſh and diſtillers grains; and the poultry is all rotten, in conſequence of a fever, occaſioned by the infamous practice of ſewing up the gut, that they may be the ſooner fattened in coops, in conſequence of this cruel retention.

of

On the fiſh, I need ſay nothing in this hot weather, but that it comes ſixty, ſeventy, fourſcore, and a hundred miles by land carriage: a circumſtance ſufficent, without any comment, to turn a Durchman's ſtomach, even if his noſe was not ſaluted in every alley with the ſweet flavour of freſh mackarel, ſelling by retail. — This is not the ſeaſon for oyſters; nevertheleſs, it may not be amiſs to mention, that the right Colcheſter are kept in ſlimepits, occaſionally overflowed by the ſea; and that the green colour, ſo much admired by the voluptuaries of this metropolis, is occaſioned by the vitriolic ſcum, which riſes on the ſurface of the ſtagnant and ſtinking water — Our rabits are bred and fed in the poulterer's cellar, where they have neither air nor exerciſe, conſequently they muſt be firm in fleſh, and delicious in flavour; and there is no game to be had for love or money.

It muſt be owned, that Covent-garden affords ſome good fruit; which, however, is always engroſſed by a few individuals of over-grown fortune, at an exorbitant price; ſo that little elſe than the refuſe of the market falls to the ſhare of the community; and that is diſtributed by ſuch filthy hands, as I cannot look at without loathing. It was but yeſterday that I ſaw a dirty barrow-bunter in the ſtreet, cleaning her fruit with her own ſpittle; and, who knows but ſome fine lady of St. James's parish might admit into her delicate mouth those very cherries, which had been rolled and moistened between the chops of a St Giles's huckster — I need not dwell upon the pallid, contaminated mash, which they call strawberries; soiled and tossed by greasy paws thorough twenty baskets crusted with dirt; and then presented with the worst milk, thickened with the worst flour into a bad likeness of cream; but the milk itself should not pass unanalysed, the produce of faded cabbage-leaves and sour draff, lowered with hot water, frothed with bruised snails, carried thro' the streets in open pails, exposed to foul rinsings, discharged from doors and windows, over-flowings from mudcarts, spatterings from coach-wheels, dirt and trash chucked into it by roguish boys for the joke's sake, &c.

I shall conclude this catalogue of London dainties, with the table-beer, guiltless of hops and malt, vapid and nauseous: much fitter to facilitate the operation of a vomit, than to quench thirst and promote digestion; the tallowy rancid mass, called butter, manufactured with candle grease and kitchenstuff; and their fresh eggs imported from France and Scotland — Now, all these enormities might be remedied with a very little attention of the police, or civil regulation; but the wise patriots of London have taken it into their heads, that all regulation is inconsistent with liberty; and that every man ought to live in his own way, without restraint — Nay, as there is not sense enough left among them to be discomposed by the nuisances I have mentioned, they may, for aught I care, wallow in the mire of their own pollution.

Bath is so much altered, that I can scarce believe it is the same place that I frequented about thirty years ago. Methinks I hear you say, "Altered it is, without doubt; but then it is altered for the better; a truth which, perhaps, you would own without hesitation, if you yourself was not altered for the worse." The reflexion may, for aught I know, be just. The inconveniencies which I overlooked in the high day of health, will naturally strike with exaggerated impression on the irritable nerves of an invalid, surprised by premature old age, and shattered with long suffering — But, I believe, you will not deny, that this place, which nature and providence seemed to have intended as a resource from distemper and disquiet, is become the very center of racket and dissipation.

ſipation. Inſtead of that peace, tranquility and eaſe, ſo neceſſary to thoſe who labour under bad health, weak nerves, and irregular ſpirits; here we have nothing but noiſe, tumult, and hurry; with the fatigue and ſlavery of maintaining a ceremonial, more ſtiff, formal, and oppreſſive, than the etiquette of a German elector. A rational hoſpital it may be; but one would imagine, that none but lunatics are admitted; and, truly, I will give you leave to call me ſo, if I ſtay much longer at Bath. — Buth I ſhall take another opportunity to explain my ſentiments at greater length on this ſubject — I was impatient to ſee the boaſted improvements in architecture, for which the upper parts of the town have been ſo much celebrated, and t'other day I made a circuit of all the new buildings. The ſquare, though irregular, is, on the whole, pretty well laid out, ſpacious, open, and airy; and, in my opinion, by far the moſt wholeſome and agreeable ſituation in Bath, eſpecially the upper ſide of it; but the avenues to it are mean, dirty, dangerous, and indirect. Its communication with the baths, is through the yard of an inn, where the poor trembling valetudinarian is carried in a chair, betwixt the heels of a double row of horſes, wincing under the currycombs of grooms and poſtilions, over and above the hazard of being obſtructed, or overturned by the carriages which are continually making their exit or their entrance — I ſuppoſe after ſome chairmen ſhall have been maimed, and a few lives loſt by thoſe accidents, the corporation will think, in earneſt, about providing a more ſafe and commodious paſſage. The Circus is a pretty bauble, contrived for ſhew, and looks like Veſpaſian's amphitheatre turned outſide in. If we conſider it in point of magnificence, the great number of ſmall doors belonging to the ſeparate houſes, the inconſiderable height of the different orders, the affected ornaments of the architrave, which are both childiſh and miſplaced, and the areas projecting into the ſtreet, ſurrounded with iron rails, deſtroy a good part of its effect upon the eye; and, perhaps, we ſhall find it ſtill more defective, if we view it in the light of convenience. The figure of each ſeparate dwelling-houſe, being the ſegment of a circle, muſt ſpoil the ſymmetry of the rooms, by contracting them towards the ſtreet windows, and leaving a larger ſweep in the ſpace behind. If, inſtead of the areas and iron rails, which ſeem to be of very little uſe, there had been a corridore with arcades all round, as in Convent-Garden, the appearance of the whole would have been more magnificent and ſtriking; thoſe arcades would have afforded an agreeable covered walk, and ſheltered the poor chairmen and their carriages from the rain, which is here almoſt perpetual. At preſent, the chairs ſtand ſoaking in the open ſtreet, from morning to night, till they become ſo many boxes of wet leather, for the benefit of the gouty and rheumatic, who are tranſported in them from place to place. Indeed, this is a ſhocking inconvenience that extends over the whole city; and, I am perſuaded, it produces infinite miſchief to the delicate and infirm; even the cloſe chairs, contrived for the ſick, by ſtanding in the open air, have their frize linings impregnated, like ſo many ſpunges, with the moiſture of the atmoſphere, and thoſe caſes of cold vapour muſt give a charming check to the perſpiration of a patient, piping hot from the Bath, with all his pores wide open.

But, to return to the Circus; it is inconvenient from its ſituation, at ſo great a diſtance from all the markets, baths, and places of public entertainment. The only entrance to it, through Gay-ſtreet, is ſo difficult, ſteep, and ſlippery, that, in wet weather, it muſt be exceedingly dangerous, both for thoſe that ride in carriages, and thoſe that walk a-foot; and when the ſtreet is covered with ſnow, as it was for fifteen days ſucceſſively this very winter, I don't ſee how any individual could go either up or down, without the moſt imminent hazard of broken bones. In blowing weather, I am told, moſt of the houſes in his hill are ſmothered with ſmoke forced down the chimneys, by the guſts of wind reverberated from the hill behind, which (I apprehend likewiſe) muſt render the atmoſphere here more humid and unwholeſome than it is in the ſquare below; for the clouds, formed by the conſtant evaporation from the baths and river in the bottom, will, in their aſcent this way, be firſt attracted and detained by the hill that riſes cloſe behind the Circus, and load the air with a perpetual ſucceſſion of vapours: this point, however, may be eaſily aſcertained by means of an hygrometer, or a paper of ſalt of tartar expoſed to the action of the atmoſphere. The ſame artiſt, who planned the Circus, has likewiſe projected a Creſcent, when that is finiſhhed, we ſhall probably have a ſtar; and thoſe who are living thirty years hence, may, perhaps, ſee all the ſigns of the Zodiac exhibited in architecture at Bath. Theſe, however fantaſtical, are ſtill deſigns that denote ſome ingenuity and knowledge in the architect; but the rage of building has laid hold on ſuch a number of adventurers, that one sees new houses starting up in every out-let and every corner of Bath; contrived without judgment, executed without solidity, and stuck together, with so little regard to plan and propriety, that the different lines of the new rows and buildings interfere with, and intersect one another in every different angle of conjunction. They look like the wreck of streets and squares disjointed by an earthquake, which hath broken the ground into a variety of holes and hillocks; or, as if some Gothic devil had stuffed them altogether in a bag, and left them to stand higgledy piggledy, just as chance directed. What sort of a monster Bath will become in a few years, with those growing excrescences, may be easily conceived: but the want of beauty and proportion is not the worst effect of these new mansions; they are built so slight, with the soft crumbling stone found in this neighbourhood, that I should never sleep quietly in one of them, when it blowed (as the sailors say) a capfull of wind; and, I am persuaded, that my hind, Roger Williams, or any man of equal strenght, would be able to push his foot through the strongest part of their walls, without any great exertion of his muscles. All these absurdities arise from the general tide of luxury, which hath overspread the nation, and swept away all, even the very dregs of the people. Every upstart of fortune, harnessed in the trappings of the mode, presents himself at Bath, as in the very focus of observations. Clerks and factors from the East Indies, loaded with the spoil of plundered provinces; planters, negro-drivers, and hucksters, from our American plantations, enriched they know not how; agents, commissaries, and contractors who, have fattened, in two successive wars, on the blood of the nation; usurers, brokers, and jobbers of every kind; men of low birth, and no breeding, have found themselves suddenly translated into a state of affluence, unknown to former ages; and no wonder that their brains should be intoxicated with pride, vanity, and presumption. Knowing no other criterion of greatness, but the ostentation of wealth, they discharge their affluence without taste or conduct, through every channel of the most absurd extravagance; and all of them hurry to Bath, because here, without any further qualification, they can mingle with the princes and nobles of the land. Even the wives and daughters of low tradesmen, who, like shovel-nosed sharks, prey upon the blubber of those uncouth whales of fortune, are infected with the same rage of displaying diſplaying their importance; and the ſlighteſt indiſpoſition ſerves them for a pretext to inſiſt upon being conveyed to Bath, where they may hobble country dances and cotillons, with 'ſquires, counſellors, and clergy. Theſe delicate creatures from Bedfordbury, Crutched-Friars, and Botolph lane, cannot breathe in the groſs air of the Lower Town, or conform to the vulgar rules of a common lodging-houſe; the huſband, therefore, muſt provide an entire houſe, or elegant apartments in the new buildings. Such is the compoſition of what is called the faſhionable company at Bath; where a very inconſiderable proportion of genteel people are loſt in a mob of impudent plebeians, who have neither underſtanding nor judgment, nor the leaſt idea of propriety and decorum; and ſeem to enjoy nothing ſo much as an opportunity of inſulting their betters.

number

Thus the number of people, and the number of houſes continue to increaſe; and this will ever be the caſe, till the ſtreams that ſwell this irreſiſtible torrent of folly and extravagance, ſhall either be exhauſted, or turned into other channels, by incidents and events which I do not pretend to foreſee. This, I own, is a ſubject on which I cannot write with any degree of patience; for the mob is a monſter I never could abide, either in his head, tail, midriff, or members: I deteſt the whole of it, as a maſs of ignorance, preſumption, malice, and brutality; and, in this term of reprobation, I include, without reſpect of rank, ſtation, or quality, all thoſe of both ſexes, who affect its manners, and court its ſociety.„

A CONCISE VIEW OF THE CLIMATE TRADE AND SOIL OF BARBADOS. *)

Nature hath been bountiful to fortify the coaſt of Barbados and rendering the great Eaſt part of that Island inacceſſible to ſhips of fifty tons and upwards. An extenſive reef of rocks runs from the ſouth point easterly to the northward. The other part of the coaſt the inhabitants have at a very great expence fortified by erecting forts and batteries within gunſhot of each other: the repairs and maintenance of which amount,

*) A ſhort Hiſtory of Barbados. Lond. 1768. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0188
DFG

amount, to a great charge: an expence ſo heavy to the country, that it is to be hoped the Government of Great Britain will ſome time or other by their aſſiſtance alleviate.

The Plantations of Barbados oppreſſed by taxes, impoveriſhed by miſmanagement and loaded by the great and neceſſary expences of their management, yield not now the profit they formerly afforded, nothwithſtanding the high eſtimation Europeans may ſet upon Weſt-India eſtates, yet it is an indiſputable fact, that the landed intereſt of Barbados (that is throughout the whole Island) does not clear communibus annis four per cent; eſtimating the principal at what land usually ſells for: the deſtruction of the woods of that Island, though it renders the country more healthful, hath decreaſed the quantity of rain and hath been thereby detrimental to the planters. The ſoil of Barbados is in general fruitful, but very different in ſeveral parts of the Island; and frequently in the ſame eſtate ſome ſpots afford a heavy clay ſoil, other a light ſand, ſome a dark heavy, others a light red earth: ſome parts wet and ſwampy, others dry and gravelly: but the land, almoſt every where for the production of ſugar, requires rich manure; the preparation of which ſhews the ſkill of the planter, as ſome parts of the Island require a light, others a heavy manure; and ſometimes both in the ſame eſtate. The manufacture of ſugar is ingenious as well as uſeful. It is attended with great labour and expence, and requires ſkill and induſtry to perfect it. It was very early introduced into this colony.

The trade of Barbados is yet flouriſhing and conſiderable, notwithſtanding the diſcouragements given to it by taxes, by duties, by the acceſſion of the large Island of Jamaica, by the conqueſt of Grenada, by the acquiſition of the late neutral Islands, by granting a free port to Dominique, by the diſtillation of ſpirits upon the continent of America, by the want of a proper ſtandard or regulation of the value of gold throughout the Weſt-India Islands; and laſtly, by the clandeſtine trade, which the Dutch of St. Euſtatia have formerly been famed for.

The annual internal expence of Barbados amounts to ſixteen thouſand pounds, beſides the conſiderable duties paid to the mother country. Bridgetown the metropolis of that Island before the two deſtructive fires in 1766 conſiſted of about fifteen hundred dwelling-houſes and ſtores, chiefly built of brick and ſtone and which were in general ſpacious, and elegantly decent: the rents of the houſes amounted to about forty forty thouſand pounds per annum. There are in that Island three other towns of ſmaller note, called Oſtin's, St. James's and Speight's.

THE BROTHERS: A COMEDY.

Act. IV. Scene III-VII. *)

Belfield junior. Sophia.

Belfield junior.

Madam, madam, will you not vouchſafe to give me a hearing?

Sophia. Unleſs you cou'd recall an act, no earthly power can cancel, all attempt at explanation is vain.

Belfield junior. Yet before we part for ever, obſtinate, inexorable Sophia, tell me what is my offence.

Sophia. Anſwer yourſelf that queſtion, Mr. Belfield; conſult your own heart, conſult your Violetta.

Belfield junior. Now, on my life, ſhe's meanly jealous of Violetta: that grateful woman has been warm in her commendations of me, and her diſtemper'd fancy turns that candour into criminality.

Sophia. Hah! he ſeems confounded! guilty beyond all doubt.

Belfield junior. By Heaven I'll no longer be the dupe to theſe bad humours: Lucy Waters, Violetta, every woman ſhe ſees or hears, alarms her jealouſy, overthrows my hopes, and rouſes every paſſion into fury. Well, Madam, at length conſult my Violetta; nay, more, conſult my happineſs; for with her, at leaſt, I ſhall find repoſe; with you, I plainly ſee, there can be none.

Sophia. 'Tis very well, Sir; the only favour you can now grant me, is never to let me ſee you again; for after what has paſs'd between us, every time you intrude into my company, you will commit an inſult upon good breeding and humanity.

Belfield junior. Madam, I'll take care to give you no further offence. (Exit.

Sophia. Oh! my poor heart will break!

Sophia.

*) London 1771. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0190
DFG

Sophia. Sir Benjamin Dove.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Hey-day, Sophia, what's the matter? What ails my child? Who has offended you? Do not I ſee the younger Belfield part from you juſt now?

Sophia. O, Sir! if you have any love for me, don't name that baſe treacherous wretch to me any more. Exit.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Upon my word, I am young Mr. Belfield's moſt obſequious ſervant: a very notable confuſion truly has he been pleaſed to make in my family. Lady Dove raves; Sophia cries; my wife calls him a ſaucy impudent fellow, my daughter ſays he's a baſe treacherous wretch; from all which I am to conclude, that he has ſpoke too plain truths to the one, and told too many lies to the other: one lady is irritated becauſe he has refus'd favours; the other, perhaps, is afflicted becauſe he has obtain'd 'em. Lady Dove has peremptorily inſiſted upon my giving him a challenge; but, to ſay the truth, I had no great ſtomach to the buſineſs, till this freſh provocation: I perceive now, I am growing into a moſt unaccountable rage; 'tis ſomething ſo different from what I ever felt before, that, for what I know, it may be courage and I miſtake it for anger; I never did quarrel with any man, and hitherto no man ever quarrel'd with me: egad, if once I break the ice, it ſhan't ſtop here: if young Belfield doesn't prove me a coward, Lady Dove ſhall ſee that, I am a man of ſpirit. — Sure I ſee my gentleman coming hither again.

(Steps aſide.

Enter Belfield junior.

Belfield junior. What meanneſs, what infatuation poſſeſſes me, that I ſhould reſolve to throw myſelf once more in her way! but ſhe's gone, and yet I may eſcape with credit.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Ay, there he is, ſure enough: by the maſs I don't like him: I'll liſten a while, and diſcover what ſort of a humour he is in.

Belfield junior. I am aſham'd of this weakneſs: I am determin'd to aſſume a proper ſpirit, and act as becomes a man upon this occaſion.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Upon my ſoul I'm very ſorry for it.

Belfield junior. Now am I ſo diſtracted between love, rage, and diſappointment, that I could find in my heart to ſacrifice her, myſelf, and all mankind.

Sir

Sir Benjamin Dove. Lord ha' mercy upon us, I'd better ſteal off and leave him to himſelf.

Belfield junior. And yet, perhaps, all this may proceed from an exceſs of fondneſs in my Sophia.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Upon my word you are bleſt with a moſt happy aſſurance.

Belfield junior. Something may have dropp'd from Violetta to alarm her jealouſy; and, working upon the exquiſite ſenſibility of her innocent mind, may have brought my ſincerity into queſtion.

Sir Benjamin Dove. I don't underſtand a word of all this.

Belfield junior. Now cou'd I fall at her feet for pardon, tho' I know not in what I have offended; I have not the heart to move. Fie upon it! What an errant coward has love made me!

Sir Benjamin Dove. A coward, does he ſay? I am heartily rejoic'd to hear it: if I muſt needs come to action, pray Heaven it be with a coward! I'll even take him while he is in the humour, for fear he ſhou'd recover his courage and I loſe mine. — So, Sir, your humble ſervant, Mr. Belfield! I'm glad I have found you, Sir.

Belfield junior. Sir Benjamin, your moſt obedient. Pray what are your commands now you have found me?

Sir Benjamin Dove. Hold! hold! don't come any nearer: don't you ſee I am in a moſt prodigious paſſion? Fire and fury, what's the reaſon you have made all this diſorder in my houſe? my daughter in tears; my wife in fits; every thing in an uproar; and all your doing. Do you think I'll put up with this treatment? If you ſuppoſe you have a coward to deal with, you'll find yourſelf miſtaken; greatly miſtaken, let me tell you, Sir! Mercy upon me, what a paſſion I am in! In ſhort, Mr. Belfield, the honour of my houſe is concern'd, and I muſt, and will, have ſatisfaction. — I think this is pretty well to ſet in with; I'm horribly out of breath; I ſweat at every pore. What great fatigues do man of courage undergo!

Belfield junior. Look'e, Sir Benjamin, I don't rightly comprehend what you wou'd be at; but, if you think I have injur'd you, few words are beſt; diſputes between men of honour are ſoon adjuſted; I'm at your ſervice, in any way you think fit.

Sir Benjamin Dove. How you fly out now! Is that giving me the ſatisfaction I require? I am the perſon injur'd in this matter, matter, and, as ſuch, have a right to be in a paſſion: but I ſee neither right nor reaſon why you, who have done the wrong, ſhou'd be as angry as I, who have receiv'd it.

Belfield junior. I ſuſpect I have totally miſtaken this honeſt gentleman: he only wants to build ſome reputation with his wife upon this rencounter, and 'twould be inhuman not to gratify him.

Sir Benjamin Dove. What ſhall I do now? Egad I ſeem to have pos'd him: this plaguy ſword ſticks ſo hard in the ſcabbard — Well, come forth rapier, 'tis but one thruſt; and what ſhou'd a man fear that has Lady Dove for his wife?

Belfield junior. Hey-day! Is the man mad? Put up your ſword, Sir Benjamin; put it up, and don't expoſe yourſelf in this manner.

Sir Benjamin Dove. You ſhall excuſe me, Sir; I have had ſome difficulty in drawing it, and am determin'd now to try what metal it's made of. So come on, Sir.

Belfield junior. Really this is too ridiculous; I tell you, Sir Benjamin, I am in no humour for theſe follies. I've done no wrong to you or yours: on the contrary, great wrong has been done to me; but I have no quarrel with you, ſo, pray, put up your ſword.

Sir Benjamin Dove. And I tell you, Mr. Belfield, 'tis in vain to excuſe yourſelf, — The leſs readineſs you ſhew, ſo much the more reſolution I feel.

Belfield junior. Well, Sir Knight, if ſuch is your humour, I won't ſpoil your longing. So have at you.

Enter Lady Dove.

Lady Dove. Ah! (Shrieks.)

Belfield junior. Hold, hold, Sir Benjamin, I never fight in ladies company. Why, I proteſt you are a perfect Amadis de Gaul; a Don Quixote in heroiſm; and the preſence of this your Dulcinea renders you invincible.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Oh! my Lady, is it you? don't be alarm'd my dear; 'tis all over: a ſmall fracas between this gentleman and myſelf; that's all; don't be under any ſurprize; I believe the gentleman has had enough; I believe he is perfectly ſatisfied with my behaviour, and I perſuade myſelf you will have no cauſe for the future to complain of his. Mr. Beldfield, this is Lady Dove.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0193
DFG

Belfield junior. Madam, to a generous enemy, 'tis mean to deny juſtice, or with-hold applauſe. You are happy in the moſt valiant of defenders; gentle as you may find him in the tender paſſions, to a man, Madam, he acquits himſelf like a man. Sir Benjamin Dove, in juſtice to your merit, I am ready to make any ſubmiſſion to this lady you ſhall pleaſe to impoſe. — If you ſuffer her to bully you after this, you deſerve to be henpeck'd all the days of your life.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Say no more, my dear Bob; I ſhall love you for this the longeſt hour I have to live.

Belfield junior. If I have done you any ſervice, promiſe me only one hour's converſation with your lovely daugther, and make what uſe of me you pleaſe.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Here's my hand, you ſhall have it; leave us. (Exit Beldfield junior.

Lady Dove. What am I to think of all this? It can't well be a contrivance; and yet 'tis ſtrange that you little animal ſhou'd have the aſſurance to face a man, and be ſo baſhful at a rencounter with a woman.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Well, Lady Dove, what are jou muſing upon? you ſee you are obey'd, the honour of your family is vindicated: ſlow to enter into theſe affairs; being once engag'd, I pertinacioufly conduct them to an iſſue.

Lady Dove. Sir Benjamin, — I — I —

Sir Benjamin Dove. Here, Jonathan, do you hear, ſet my things ready in the library; make haſte.

Lady Dove. I ſay, Sir Benjamin, I think —

Sir Benjamin Dove. Well, let's hear what it is you think.

Lady Dove. Bleſs us all, why you ſnap one up ſo — I ſay, I think, my dear, you have acquitted yourſelf tolerably well, and I am perfectly ſatisfied.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Humph! you think I have done tolerably well, I think ſo too; do you apprehend me? Tolerably! for this buſineſs that you think tolerably well done, is but half concluded, let me tell you: nay, what ſome wou'd call the tougheſt part of the undertaking remains unfiniſh'd; but, I dare ſay, with your concurrence, I ſhall find it eaſy enough.

Lady Dove. What is it you mean to do with my concurrence; what mighty project does your wiſe brain teem with?

Sir Benjamin Dove. Nay, now I reflect on't again, I don't think there'll be any need of your concurrence; for, nolens or volens, I'm determin'd it ſhall be done. In ſhort, this it is,

is, I am unalterably reſolv'd from this time forward, Lady Dove, to be ſole and abſolute in this houſe, maſter of my own ſervants, father to my own child, and ſovereign lord and governor, Madam, over my own wife.

Lady Dove You are?

Sir Benjamin Dove. I am. Gods! what a pitiful contemptible figure does a man make under petticoat-government. Periſh he that's mean enough do ſtoop to ſuch indignities! I am determin'd to be free. — (Paterſon enters and whiſpers Lady Dove.) — Hah! how's this, Mr. Paterſon? What liberties are theſe you take with my wife, and before my face? No more of theſe freedoms, I beſeech you, Sir, as you expect to anſwer it to a huſband, who will have no ſecrets whiſper'd to his wife, to which he is not privy; nor any appointments made, in which he is not a party.

Paterſon. Hey-day! what a change of government is here! Egad, I'm very glad on't — I've no notion of a female adminiſtration. (Exit.

Lady Dove. What inſolence is this, Sir Benjamin; what ribaldry do you ſhock my ears with? Let me paſs, Sir, I'll ſtay no longer in the ſame room with you.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Not in the ſame room, nor under the ſame roof, ſhall you long abide, unleſs you reform your manners; however, for the preſent, you muſt be content to ſtay where you are.

Lady Dove. What, Sir, will you impriſon me in my own houſe? I'm ſick: I'm ill; I'm ſuffocated; I want air; I muſt and will walk into the garden.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Then, Madam, you muſt find ſome better weapon than your fan to parry my ſword with: this paſs I defend: what, do'ſt think, after having encounter'd a man, I ſhall turn my back upon a woman! No, Madam, I have ventured my life to defend your honour; 'twou'd be hard if I wanted ſpirit to protect my own.

Lady Dove. You monſter, wou'd you draw your ſword upon a woman?

Sir Benjamin Dove. Unleſs it has been your pleaſure to make me a monſter, Madam, I am none.

Lady Dove. Would you murder me, you inhuman brute? Would you murder your poor fond defenceleſs wife?

Sir Benjamin Dove. Nor tears, nor threats, neither ſcolding, nor ſoothing, ſhall ſhake me from my purpoſe: your yoke, Lady Dove, has laid too heavy upon my ſhoulders; I can ſupport it no longer: to-morrow, Madam, you leave this houſe.

Lady Dove. Will you break my heart, you tyrant? Will you turn me out of doors to ſtarve, you barbarous man?

Sir Benjamin Dove. Oh! never fear; you will fare to the full as well as you did in your firſt huſband's time; in your poor, dear, dead Mr. Searcher's time. You told me once you priz'd the paltry grey-hound that hung at his button-hole, more than all the jewels my folly had laviſh'd upon you. I take you at your word; you ſhall have your bawble, and I will take back all mine; they'll be of no uſe to you hereafter.

Lady Dove. O! Sir Benjamin, Sir Benjamin, for mercy's ſake, turn me not out of your doors! I will be obedient, gentle, and complying, for the future; don't ſhame me; on my knees, I beſeech you don't.

Enter Belfield ſenior.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Mr. Belfield, I am heartily glad to ſee you; don't go back, Sir; you catch us indeed a little unawares; but theſe ſituations are not uncommon in well-ordered families; rewards and puniſhments are the life of government, and the authority of a huſband muſt be upheld.

Belfield ſenior. I confeſs, Sir Benjamin, I was greatly ſurpriz'd at finding Lady Dove in that attitude: but I never pry into family ſecrets; I had much rather ſuppoſe your Lady was on her knees to intercede with you in my behalf, than be told ſhe was reduc'd to that humble poſture for any reaſon that affects herſelf.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Sir, you are free to ſuppoſe what you pleaſe for Lady Dove; I'm willing to ſpare you that trouble on my account; and therefore, I tell you plainly, if you will ſign and ſeal your articles this night, to-morrow morning Sophia ſhall be yours: I'm reſolv'd that the ſelf-ſame day, which conſecrates the redemption of my liberty, ſhall confirm the ſurrender of yours.

Lady Dove. O! Mr. Belfield, I beſeech you, intercede with this dear cruel man in my behalf; wou'd you believe that he harbours a deſign of expelling me out of his houſe, on the very day too when he purpoſes celebrating the nuptials of his daughter?

Belfield.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0196
DFG

Belfield ſenior. Come, Sir Benjamin, I muſt ſpeak to you now as a friend in the neareſt connection; I beg you will not damp our happineſs with ſo melancholy an event: I will venture to pledge myſelf for her ladyſhip.

Sir Benjamin Dove. Well for your ſake perhaps I may prolong her departure for one day; but I'm determin'd, if ſhe does ſtay to-morrow, ſhe ſhall ſet the firſt diſh upon the table; if 'tis only to ſhew the company what a refractory wife in the hands of a man of ſpirit may be brought to ſubmit to. Our wives, Mr. Belfield, may teaze us and vex us, and ſtill eſcape with impunity; but if once they thoroughly provoke us, the charm breaks, and they are loſt for ever. (Exeunt.

Scheme for a new Memorandum-Book for the uſe of the Ladies, with a ſpecimen. *)

Among the many Pocket-Companions, New Memorandum-Books, Gentleman and Tradeſman's Daily Aſſiſtants, and other productions of the like nature, calculated for the uſe of thoſe who mix in the buſtle of the world, I cannot but applaud thoſe polite and elegant inventions, The Ladies Memorandum-Books, as theſe ſeem chiefly adapted to the more important buſineſſes of pleaſure and amuſement. I ſhall not take upon me to determine which is the moſt preferable: each of them being, if you believe the ſolemn aſſeverations of their proprietors, "the beſt and moſt complete of its kind that has hitherto been publiſhed."

The utility of theſe little books, with reſpect to the fair ſex, is on the firſt view apparent; as they are divided for each day of the week into diſtinct columns, allotted to the ſeveral branches of Engagements, Expences, and Occaſional Memorandums. Theſe, indeed, comprehend every thing that can either attract their regard, or take up their time: I ſhall therefore point out ſome particular avantages that will ariſe from a right uſe and regulation of them.

With regard to Engagements, it is very well known, what embarraſſments, jealouſies, and quarrels, have ariſen from an erroneous management in that moſt eſſential part of female tranſactions, the paying and receiving of viſits. It has hitherto *) The Adventurer (by Mr. Hawksworth) Lond. 1766. 4 Vol. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0197
DFG

been usual to trust entirely in this point to the care of an illiterate footman, or heedless porter, who is to take account of all the raps at the door, and to enter the names of the several visitants in a regular journal. Hence it frequently happens, that the bond of amity is dissolved, and perpetual variance created between families, by the mistake or forgetfulness of a servant. Lady Formal and Mrs. Prim were once the most intimate females living: they curtsied to one another regularly at church and the playhouse, talked together wherever they met, and left their names once a month alternately at each other's house for several years, till it happened that Lady Formal's Swiss forgot to set down Mrs. Prim's last visit to her ladyship; which occasions them now to stare at one another like perfect strangers, while each considers the other as guilty of that most atrocious crime, the owing a visit. A card was sent two months beforehand to invite Mrs. Gadabout to a rout; but by the negligence of the maid it unfortunately miscarried, before the date of it was posted in the day-book, and consequently she was prevented from going. The affront was unpardonable; her absence rendered one whist-table useless; the neglect was told every where and the innocent Mrs. Gadabout wonders at the reason why she is so seldom invited as a party in card assemblies. These lamentable mistakes are, therefore, effectually guarded against by the use of the Memorandum-Book, which puts it in every lady's power to keep a more exact register of all her Engagements, and to state the balance of visits fairly between debtor and creditor.

And as there is certainly no virtue more amiable, or of greater emolument, than female œconomy, to which nothing contributes more than a just knowledge of expences, the Memorandum-Book, has also wisely provided for this; in which, under the article of Expences, the lady may set down the particular sums laid out in masquerade tickets, subscription concerts, wax-lights for routs, drums or hurricanes, birthday suits, chair-hire, and the like: she may also know the true balance between her winnings and losings, and make a due registry of her debts of honour. For want of this method many widows of distinction have imperceptibly run out the whole income of their jointures in a few months, and been forced to retire the rest of the year into country lodgings; and many married ladies have been constrained to petition the brutes their husbands for the advance of a quarter's pin-money, to satisfy the importunate dunnings of a needy honourable gamester.

to

The blank alloted for Occasional Memorandums may be filled up from time to time with the lye of the day, topics of scandal, names and abodes of milliners, descriptions of new fashions, and a hundred other circumstances of equal importance. This will greatly relieve the memory, and furnish an inexhaustible store of matter for polite conversation.

There is another very pleasing advantage arising from the use of these books, as we are informed by one of the compilers, who acquaints us, that "if preserved, they will enable any lady to tell what busines she has transacted, and what company she has been in, every day, during any period of her life." How enchanting, how rapturous, must such a review prove to those who make a figure in the polite world! to live over their days again! to recall the transporting idea of masquerades, plays, concerts, cards, and dress! to revive lost enjoyments, and in imagination to tread over again the delightful round of past pleasures!

I was led to the consideration of this subject by a visit I the other day made a polite lady, whom I found earnestly employed in writing. I would have withdrawn immediately; but she told me she was only entering some particulars in her memorandum-book, which would soon be finished, and desired me to take a chair. I expressed some curiosity to know her method; upon which she very frankly put the book into my hand, bidding me peruse it; "for," says she, "I do nothing that I need be ashamed of." As she was soon after called out of the room, I took the opportunity of transcribing her first week's account, which I shall faithfully present to my fair readers, as a farther illustration of the use of these books and if they please, as a pattern for their practice.

Engagements.	Occasional Memorandums.
January.
1. Monday. To call at Deard's in the morning. To dine with my husband's uncle, the city merchant.	City politeness intolerable! Crammed with mince-pies, and fatigued with compliments of the season! Play at Pope Joan for pence; O the creatures!
2. Tuesday. In the morning with the Miss Flareits, to	A beautiful new French brocade at Silvertongue's on Ludgatehill to drive to the ſilk-mercers, &c. At night to go to the Genii.

3. Wednesday. Expect Mademoiſelle la Toure to try on my French head. In the Evening to pay fortythree viſits.

4 Thursday. My own day at home. To have a drum major and ſeventeen card-tables.

5. Friday. To go to the auction with Lady Nicknack, To dine at home with a parcel of my huſband's city relations.

6. Saturday. Monſieur Le Friſe all the morning to dreſs my head. At night (being Twelfth-night) at court. To dance, if I can, with the handſome Bob Brilliant.

7. Sunday. If I riſe ſoon enough, Saint James's Church. In the afternoon to write a defence of Hoyle to Miſs Petulant at Bath, who has controverted ſome of his principles. Lady Brag's in the evening.

Ludgatehill. Mem. To teize my huſband to buy me a ſuit of it. Engaged the ſtage-box for Woodward's night.

Mademoiſelle the milliner tells me Lady Z's in the ſtraw, — Told it as a great ſecret at Lady F's, the counteſs of L's, Mrs. R's, &c. &c. &c Miſs Sharp is a greater cheat than her mamma. Company went before five. Stupid creature Mrs. Downright! never to have read Hoyle!

Lady Nicknack finely taken in. The whole day a blank. Head-ach. Could not dreſs. Went to bed horrid ſoon; — before one. Huſband drunk. Lay alone, my maid ſat by me.

My left temple ſinged with the curling iron. Several fine French dreſſes at court; but lady Homebred's, paultry Engliſh! Sir John Dapperwit whiſpered me, that Miſs Bloom was almoſt as charming as myſelf. She muſt paint I am certain.

Not up till two. Finiſhed my letter at ſix, and ſent John expreſs with it. Bad luck at night. Never could win on Sundays. Miſs Serious, who hates cards, ſays it is a judgment.

Among

Among the articles under Expences I found the following.

January.	l.	s.	d.
1. Bought at Deard's, a blauble for a new year's gift to my little god-child - -	5	5	0
3. To Mrs La Toure in part of her bill -	31	10	0
To ditto for extraordinary trouble -	3	12	0
5. Bought at the auction, a china lap dog -	4	9	0
6. Monsieur le Frise, for dressing my head, &c.	0	10	6
7. Lost ad cards, at Lady Brag's - -	47	5	0

I intend in a future paper to take notice of some other advantages to be drawn from such a use of those Memorandum-Books, as above stated; and shall ad present conclude with desiring my female readers to supply themselves immediately, and to send me an account of the use they make of them.

THE CHARACTER OF A GAMESTER DEFENDED. *)

If gaming does an aged sire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice,
And shakes, in hanging sleeves, the little box and dice.
Dryden.

To the Adventurer.

Sir.

It is a remark of some Philosophers, that there is a malignity in human nature, which urges every man to depress him who is already sinking. The Gamester is a character, at which the artillery of the Legislature has been long levelled: the practice of his profession has been rendered extremely difficult, and the instruments of it have been destroyed wherever they could be found; he has been persecuted by Justices, Constables, and Watchmen; he has languished in Newgate, and toiled in Bridewell. Under this accumulated distress, he is not the object of pity but contempt; every mouth is open against him; he is cursed by the mechanic and the trader, derided by wits, and hooted by the mob. In defence of this injured character, which I have long born,

*) The Adventurer. &c.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0201
DFG

and of which I am not yet ashamed, permit me to appear in your paper.

In the first place, Sir, the Gamester is a Gentleman: and though he has been insulted by beggars and cits, the polite world is still in his interest; and he has still friends at Westminster, from the grey-headed General to the beardless Senator. With the character of a Gentleman, there is but one vice which is now believed to be wholly incompatible; and such is the malice of our enemies, that we have been degraded by the imputation of it, and our ruling passion is said to be Avarice.

But, can he be avaricious, who trusts his whole property to Chance? who immediately circulates what he wins, with a liberality that has been censured by others as profusion? Can Avarice be his motive to play, who, with twenty thousand pounds in the funds, sits down with a man whose whole estate he knows to be in his pocket, and to amount to no more than ten pieces? As the love of money appears incontestibly not to govern one of these persons, it cannot be proved to govern the other: The charge of Avarice is, indeed, so ridiculous and absurd, that I am ashamed of an attempt to confute it.

This charge might with great justice be retorted upon Trade, which, when put in competition with gaming, must appear to great disadvantage. Trade has besides introduced all the superfluities that have enervated and corrupted mankind: Trade has even produced opposite evils; it has pampered luxury, and wearied labour; but Gaming has done neither.

Trade, indeed, circulates property; but property might with greater advantage be circulated by Gaming. If it be asked, how the persons employed in this delightful circulation of property, are to be furnished with the necessaries of life, when Trade is at an end; I answer, that the necessaries of life, in the estimation of Virtue and the Gamester, are few; a sheepskin, a hovel, and a dice-box, would furnish the Gamester with sufficient apparel, shelter, and entertainment; and with these he would be as happy as he is now; for he has no power of acquiring happiness that is not exerted in play, and of other happiness he has indeed no conception.

If Play was then universally pursued, as at once comprehending all business and all pleasure, one man might not only grow rich, and another poor, but the same person might alternately pass thro' all the vicissitudes of fortune, while he sat ſat upon the ground in the ſun, without toiling in the manufactory, or ſweating at the forge, without the perplexity of accompts, or the perils of a voyage.

If it be again aſked, when life is reduced to this ſtate of primitive ſimplicity, what would be the advantage of wealth? I anſwer, the ſame as it is at preſent to thoſe who poſſeſs more than they ſpend, a conſciouſneſs that they are wealthy; and thoſe who are capable of more exalted felicity, would enjoy in the acquiſition the tranſport of winning, without conſidering money to have my power, quality or uſe, but as a ſtake.

Theſe, indeed, are Utopian ſcenes; and I return, with a ſigh, to vindicate my profeſſion from other imputations, which are equally falſe and injurious.

It has been ſaid, that we are ſtrangers to reciprocal felicity; and that the happineſs of one Gameſter is produced by the miſery of another, the pain of him who loſes being always proportioned to the pleaſure of the winner. But this is only the cavil of popular prejudice: If I am happy, what is it to me who elſe is miſerable? Every man, whatever he may pretend, is concerned only for himſelf; and might, conſiſtent with rigth reaſon, cut any other man's throat if he could eſcape puniſhment, and ſecure to himſelf any avantage by the fact. If any of your readers have ſtill ſcruples, and deſire to ſee this doctrine farther illuſtrated, I refer them to the great Dr. Mandeville's Fable of the Bees.

Among other enemies, that have been encouraged to fall upon the Gameſter in his diſtreſs, is Bigotry or Religion; for I conſider both theſe terms as expreſſions of the ſame idea. Bigotry then accuſes us with exerciſing our employment on a Sunday; but this accuſation is the effect of ſuch complicated folly, ignorance and malice, that it could have had no other author. Not to inſiſt that a Gentleman is under no moral obligation to regard one day more than another, is he to be inſulted for doing that, which has a direct tendency to deſtroy luxury root and branch, on a Sunday? Shall Virtue, in this enlightened age, be given up to Ceremony; and Patriotiſm be ſtigmatized as Impiety? I have, on every other article, been able to keep my temper; but I can never bear the cant of Bigotry with patience.

There

There is, however, another charge, which I shall not obviate as an imputation of prophaneness, but of folly. It is said that we utter the most horrid oaths and imprecations; that we invocate beings whom we do not believe to exist, and denounce curses that can never be fulfilled. This has, indeed, been practised in our assemblies; but by those only who are novices in the profession: for among other advantages that arise from Gaming, is such a silent acquiescence in the will of Fortune, as would do honour to a Stoic; or, at least, a calm philosophical immutability of countenance, by which all that passes in the bosom is concealed.

This acquisition, it must be confessed, requires some parts and long practice; but there have been many illustrious examples of it among us. A Gentleman, my particular friend who had the honour to be many years an eminent Gamester, being without money, committed a robbery upon the highway, to procure another stake, that he might return to his profession: It happened unfortunately that he was taken; and though he had great interest with some persons that shall be nameless, yet he was convicted and hanged. This Gentleman's ill-luck continued all the while he was in gaol; so that he was compelled to dispose of his body to the Surgeons, and lost the money to a friend who visited him in the cells, the night before execution. He appeared, however, next morning with great composure; no reflection on the past, no anticipation of the future, caused him once to change countenance during his passage to the gallows; and though he was about to receive death from a greasy scoundrel, whom he knew once to have been a butcher, yet he swore but two oaths in the cart; and was so indifferent as to what should afterwards befall him, that he bravely refused to say Amen to the Prayers.

If by your communication of these hints, the clamours of slander shall be silenced, and the true character of a Gamester shall be more generally known, — I have secrets, which may be communicated entre nous, — and the next dead set — you understand me — I am a man of honour, and you may command,

Sir, Yours, &c.

DESCRIPTION

DESCRIPTION OF THE DUTCH COLONIES OF BERBICE, DEMERARY AND ESSEQUEBO.*)

Rio Demerary, Nov. 15, 1766.

Dear Brother,

From my preceding Letters you will be able to form an idea of the ſtate of Guiana before the European Nations viſited, and ſettled themſelves on this Coaſt. It now remains for me briefly to inform you of the ſubſequent changes which have been induced by European Policy, Induſtry, and Luxury. Religion I omit, becauſe that ſeems to have had no influence in theſe alterations. It is my intention, however, to confine my information, relative to theſe particulars, ſolely to that part of Guiana, which is inhabited by the ſubjects of the United Provinces; my knowledge of the other European Colonies being too imperfect to merit a communication.

The moſt ancient and conſiderable of all the Dutch Colonies in Guiana, is Surinam; but as that River, with its Settlements, which were made firſt by the Subjects of England, are already ſufficiently known in Europe, I ſhall omit a deſcription of them.

Next in the order of ſituation is the Colony of Berbice, ſituated on the ſhores of the River of that name, about twenty-five leagues N. W. by W. ½ N. diſtant from Surinam, running from North to South, and diſcharging itſelf into the Atlantic Ocean. The Coaſt on each ſide of the River forms a Bay at its entrance, which is near a mile in width, having a ſmall Iſland in the middle, known by the name of Crab Iſland. Oppoſite this Iſland, on the eaſtern ſhore, is a ſmall Poſt, with ſeveral pieces of cannon and ſome ſoldiers; but the channel on the other ſide, which is navigable for veſſels of any burthen, is undefended, and covered by the Iſland from the guns on the oppoſite ſhore. Without the entrance of this River is a Bar, which, at high tide, has ſeldom more than ſixteen feet of water; but within, the water is of ſufficient depth, and the river is navigable for ſhips of burthen, two hundred miles from its mouth.

The Plantations are ſituated on each ſide of the River, and extend near three hundred miles from its entrance; Fort Naſſau, which is the Seat of Government, and contiguous to which are are the public Offices, Churches, and Houſes of the Civil and Military Officers, being ſituated at one hundred miles from the mouth of the River; the Dutch having here, as in all their Colonies, neglected the lower and more fertile land, near the ſea-coaſt, for that which is more elevated, in the interior part of the country. At preſent, however, they are endeavouring to repair their error, and the Seat of Government is ſoon to be removed to a point of land on the eaſtern ſhore of Berbice, about a mile from its entrance, which is formed between Berbice and the River Conya, wich there diſcharges itſelf into the former.

*) (Bancroft's) Natural hiſtory of Gniana. Lond. 1769. 8.

Conya is a narrow, but deep river, running from ſouth to north, but diverging ſomewhat eaſterly from Berbice. There are ſeveral Plantations on the ſides of this river, which makes a part of the Colony of Berbice, which is at preſent under the government of his Excellency John Heyliger, Eſquire, who is ſtiled Governor General.

This, like all the Dutch Colonies in the Weſt Indies, is under the juriſdiction of the Dutch Weſt India Company, and the lands are granted gratis, by the Governor and Court of Policy, to petitioners, upon conditional terms of ſettlement; and if theſe are not complied with, the land again reverts to the donors, and is granted to other petitioners. The inhabitans of this Colony, however, as well as thoſe of Surinam, are reſtricted from tranſmitting the produce of their Plantations (which is chiefly Sugar, Coffee, Cotton, and Cocao,) to any Port which is not within the Province of Holland; as thoſe of Demerary and Eſſequebo are obliged to export theirs to the Province of Zealand. Theſe are commercial regulations, which have been thought to be for the mutual intereſt of the Company and Inhabitants.

In the year 1763 an inſurrection happened among the Slaves of this Colony, who rebelled to the amount of ſeveral thouſands, and maſſacred a conſiderable number of the White Inhabitants, while the reſt fled to Fort Naſſau, where, fearing their communication with the ſea coaſt might be obſtructed, the then Governor, by the advice of his Council, precipitately blew up the Fort, and retired, with the White Inhabitants, on board ſeveral merchant ſhips in the River, and ſailed to its entrance, there to wait for aſſiſtance from abroad. This retreat left the Rebels the undiſturbed poſſeſſion of the whole Colony, and threw the inhabitants of the neighbouring Colonies, particularly of Demerary and Eſſequebo, into the utmoſt conſternation, as they were the moſt contiguous to Berbice, and apprehended a viſit from the Rebels, which muſt have been attended with the moſt unhappy conſequences, as their own ſlaves were at leaſt five times more numerous than the White Inhabitans, and betrayed ſo eager a diſpoſition for revolting, that it was feared they would not have patience to wait for aſſiſtance from their brethren in Berbice.

utmoſt

In this critical ſituation, however, they experienced the advantage of their connection with the ſubjects of Great Britain, as at this time a ſhip of war, belonging to Gedney Clarke, Eſq, Collector of his Majeſty's Cuſtoms at Barbadoes, which had been put into commiſſion by Admiral Douglas, and was commanded by a Lieutenant of the Britiſh Navy, arrived with a Company of Marines, and another of Soldiers, raiſed at the expence of Mr. Clarke, who was proprietor of ſeveral plantations in Demerary, as were ſeveral other Gentlemen in Barbadoes. This armament effectually fruſtrated the rebellious deſigns of the Slaves in Demerary, and the civil diſſentions among the Rebels of Berbice diverted them from their intended viſit. In the interim, however, the Governor of Berbice received a body of Soldiers from Surinam, and ſeveral armed veſſels from the Iſlands of Curaçao and St. Euſtatia, with which he ſailed up the River, and took poſſeſſion of the Dauger-head, a large Plantation belonging to the Weſt-India Company, where he maintained himſelf till the arrival of an armament from Holland, when the Rebels were ſoon driven from the woods, from whence hunger, and the arrows of the Indians, obliged them to return, and ſeek an aſylum in their former ſlavery. Several hundred of the chief promoters of this inſurrection were however burnt; before this, ſeveral hundreds of the Carribbee Indians were, by the Governor of Eſſequebo and Demerary, engaged to take up arms againſt the Rebels, whom they not a little harraſſed, by concealing themſelves in the woods by day, and ſetting fire to their houſes in the night, by ſhooting arrows fired at the point among the Troolies, with which they were thatched, and then killing the Negroes as they fled out in confuſion.

About fifteen leagues North Weſt from Berbice is the River Demerary, near three quarters of a mile in width at its entrance, which is in 6 deg. 46 m. North Latitude. On the eaſt ſide is a ſandy ſhoal, extending a little diſtance from the ſhore; to avoid this, nothing is required but to enter the River near its middle, with its courſe in full view, when the water water will be found deeper, and its entrance easier, than that of Berbice or Essequebo. A little within the mouth of the River, on the east shore, is a small Post, with several patereroes, which are very insufficient for defending the mouth of the River against a vessel of any force, though this is the only fortification in this part of the Colony. About eight leagues from thence are three Islands, at no great distance from each other. On that which is in the middle is the residence of the Commandant, and there the Courts of Judicature are held, and the Company's Troops are stationed. This River is navigable for vessels of great burthen one hundred miles from its mouth, and is settled near one hundred miles farther. Two hundred miles from the entrance of this River are several Cataracts, from which the water falls by a long, but easy descent. Some distance above these the River divides into two branches, which diverge from each other about eight points, the one running S. W. and the other S. E. But their source has never been discovered by any European.

One league West from Demerary is the Great River Essequebo, which, at its entrance, is nine miles from shore to shore. In its mouth are three Islands called the Lagueon Islands, two of which extend some distance without the main land. Within these are the Fortune Islands, and within them a succession of other Islands, which is continued the distance of twelve or fourteen leagues from the River's mouth, which, on the eastern shore is defended by a Post similar to that in Demerary, though the western channel is intirely defenceless. Fort Zealand is situated on an Island known by the name of the Fort Island, lying about ten leagues above the entrance of the River. This Fort mounts about forty pieces of cannon, and on this Island is the usual residence of the Governor, and other Officers of Government, as well as of some of the Planters, &c. On this, and all the other Islands, as well as on each side of the River, for a great distance, are Plantations, producing Sugar, Coffee, and Cotton chiefly.

The River Essequebo receives a great number of creeks and rivers on each side; but the principal stream has its source more than three hundred miles from the sea-coast, diverging westerly from Demerary, whose course from the entrance is nearly South to the place where it divides into two branches. Besides these, there are the Rivers Pomaroon, Currantine, Mirriwina, and a great number of small rivers and creeks discharging themselves into the North Sea; but as they are all

all unsettled, I shall not descend to a description of them. All these, as well as several of those Rivers which are settled, are unknown to English Geographers, and not to be discovered in any Charts of that country that I have ever seen.

Essequebo and Demerary, on account of their proximity, are comprized in one Colony, which bears the name of both Rivers, and is under the government of his Excellency Laurence Storm Van Gravesande. Essequebo is the most ancient, having been settled near sixty years; though no great advances were made in agriculture till lately. Demerary, which has been settled but little more than twenty years, at present promises fair to become a most flourishing Colony, with proper encouragement; though the Dutch do not bestow all the attention on these colonies which they deserve, and in some measure neglect the West for the East Indies.

The Plantations of these Colonies are situated in single tiers on each side of the River, extending seven hundred and fifty rods in depth from the River, but are of different extent in front, according to the productions to which they are appropriated; those for Sugar extending usually either a thousand or fifteen hundred rods in front of the River; those for Coffee or Cotton seldom exceed five hundred. Between each plantation the Company has reserved twenty-four feet of ground, on which roads are to be made, if ever a second row of plantations should be formed behind the first. Sugar plantations are deemed the most profitable, and are the objects to which all aspire. Those, however, whose fortunes are unequal to so expensive an undertaking, content themselves with Coffee or Cotton Plantations, thill they have thereby sufficiently improved their stock for undertaking a greater object.

The Sugar-mills of these Colonies are either turned by mules, obtained chiefly from the Spaniards of Oronoque, by illicit traffic; or by wind, or water. The dwelling-houses are usually surrounded by piazzas, which in this climate are particularly convenient. The plantations near the sea-coast are at present esteemed much the most valuable. They indeed require to be not only surrounded with dykes, for excluding the water which overflows the adjacent woods, and to defend them from the inundation of the tides, which rise to a great height, especially near the vernal and autumnal Equinoxes; but also to be inclosed and intersected by trenches with gates emptying into the River, which at low tide are opened for discharging the water which may have fallen on the plantation by rain; all which requires no small labour: But it is amply repaid by other attendant advantages. The trenches serve for canals, by which the canes are, with great facility, transported to the mills; the fertility of the soil is inexhaustible; and the land, being covered with but little else than Troolies and Manicoles, is much easier cleared than in the more elevated parts of the River, where indeed dykes and trenches are unnecessary; but the fertility of the soil is much less durable, and the lands are covered with large timber, which, in hardness, solidity, and weight, is but little inferior to iron: This, however, though it augments the labour in clearing lands, is far from being the least advantageous production of this country.

Many of the largest and most flourishing Plantations, both in Essequebo and Demerary, but especially in the latter, are the property of British subjects, who have been induced to form settlements in this Country, by the peculiar advantages with which it is endowed; and though the Dutch in Surinam, and all their other Colonies, are ignorant of the art of converting Melasses to Rum, with advantage, yet in this Colony they have been, by the English inhabitans, perfectly instructed in the arts of Distillation, and produce Rum, which is not inferior, in any respect, even to that of Jamaica. The White inhabitants of this Colony are Dutch, English, Swiss, and Germans, but chiefly the two former. Many of these are unfortunate persons, whom the unavoidable accidents of life, or frowns of fortune, have induced to seek an asylum in distant countries, where their industry is often so amply rewarded, that they are enabled to return with opulence and credit, and bless those accidents which reduced them to the necessity of abandoning their homes; and which they once esteemed the greatest misfortune.

Agriculture, and all other labour, in these Colonies, is almost wholly performed by Negroes as the White Inhabitants undertake no laborious employment; and even the mechanics do but little more than oversee and direct the Slaves, which are at least five times more numerous than the Whites, and are therefore kept at a submissive, and humble distance by severity of discipline, which not only contributes to the safety of the white Inhabitants, but even to the happiness of the Slaves; the impossibility of attaining, is ever found to destroy the desire of enjoyment; and rigid treatment, by annihilating every hope of liberty, renders them content with the enjoyment of ſlavery. The late inſurrection of the Slaves in Berbice, who of all others were the moſt favoured, affords a recent example of the danger of too much indulgence to Slaves, by which they are excited to attempt the perfect recovery of liberty. In this ſtate there is no medium; either the minds of ſlaves muſt be depreſſed by abject ſlavery, or the lives of their maſters are in imminent danger. For this reaſon they have been oppreſſed by many humiliating penalties and diſtinctions. Their evidence, relative to a White Perſon, is of no validity; and attempt to ſtrike a White Inhabitant is puniſhed with death; and their maſters or overſeers, have not only the power of inflicting corporal puniſhment, but are in ſome meaſure allowed to exerciſe a right over their lives, ſince the putting a Negro to death, is attended only with a pecuniary puniſhment. In this ſituation they are ſubjected to many complicated ſpecies of miſery, expoſed to the tyranny of the imperious, and to an inceſſant toil, which will have no period but with their lives. This treatment has the appearance of cruelty, and cannot be reconciled to the principles of juſtice and equity; many things, however, which are repugnant to humanity, may be excuſed, on account of their neceſſity, for ſelf-preſervation.

by

The expence of maintaining the Slaves, in this climate, is very trifling. The firſt year that a ſlave is purchaſed, he is ſupplied with food by his maſter, and is aſſigned a piece of ground, which on Sundays he clears from the wood, and plants with yams, plantins, edda's, caſſava, ocro's, &c. but eſpecially the former, which produce ten thouſand pounds per acre. When the year is expired he recurrs to his planting-ground for his future proviſion, which he is ever after to keep ſupplied with a ſufficient ſtock for his ſuſtenance, for which he is allowed every Sunday only; receiving, however, from his maſter a weekly allowance of dried fiſh, to the amount of a pound and an half, which is all that his maſter contributes towards his food. The females receive the ſame treatment, and the drink of both is nothing but water; yet from this water, and theſe farinaceous and eſculent vegetables, with a morſel of dried fiſh, theſe people derive ſufficient nutriment to ſuſtain the hardeſt labour in the moſt enervating climate.

The cloathing of the Negroes (the houſhold ſlaves excepted) is ſcarce ſufficient to anſwer the demands of modeſty. Several modern Compilers of the History of our West India settlements have enumerated stockings and shoes among the articles of cloathing for the Negroes, though nothing could more certainly betray their ignorance of this subject, since a slave in stockings and shoes, in these countries, would be as uncommon a spectacle, as a Negro instructed in the principles of Christianity; and if any of them have either shirts, breeches, or petticoats, they are the produce of their own private industry, as their masters furnish only a piece of coarse blue, or brown linen, which is applied to the middle in both sexes, and a blanket, with which the slave covers himself at night, sleeping on boards only.

In these, as in all other West India Colonies, the slaves diminish in number, unless recruited by successive supplies from Africa. This decrease has been attributed to various causes, but most commonly to hard labour and oppression, though with very little appearance of reason, since they are much more robust, healthy, and vigorous than their masters. They are, indeed, spurred to industry by the whip of correction, which is ever at their heels, and not sparingly exercised; but coarse food, with hard labour, are ever accompanied with the blessings of increased health and vigour, which the pampered effeminate sons of luxury may justly envy, but can never attain; and the true cause of their want of increase results from the voluptuous intercourse of the Whites with the young wenches. That this is the true cause of their decrease, is farther evident, from observing the situation of Virginia and Maryland, where the Slaves increase, without any addition by importation, because this pernicious copulation is there detested.

The Inhabitants derive no small assistance from the Indians, particularly the Arrowauks, some of whom reside on almost every plantation, and are employed in various services, but especially in hunting and fishing, which, being their natural employment, they are able to exercise it with uncommon art and success, and may be hired with a few baubles for several months. These Indians, however, are debauched by luxury and intemperance, and their manners but ill agree with those of the Indians who have preserved their natural innocence and simplicity; and they are encouraged in their propensity to intemperance by the Whites, who freely supply them with Rum, thereby to attach them more firmly to their service; a practice, which considerably impairs their health, and diminiſhes their numbers. Effects ſimilar to theſe have happened in every part of America, where the Aborigines have maintained an intimate intercourſe with the Europeans, from the unnatural union of our vices with the manners of the Indians; and it is a piece of refined and uſeful policy in the Jeſuit Miſſionaries of Paraguay, to exclude their New Converts from all intercourſe with Foreigners, not only to anſwer the purpoſes of that politic Society, but alſo to preſerve them in a happy ignorance of our vices, which alone could ſecure them from being corrupted by their example. The cauſe of theſe effects is obvious; we contaminate them with our Vices, but withold the Antidotes of Religion, Morality, and Literature.

diminishes

The Dutch, in theſe Colonies, encourage intermarriages with the Indian women; and ſeveral of the moſt conſiderable families, in rank and fortune, in Eſſequebo, derive their origin from theſe alliances; by which the Dutch have acquired an aſcendency and influence over the Indians, which is of the utmoſt uſe and importance; and the Governor not only reſerves to himſelf the deciſion of their differences, but by his order prohibits the ſeveral contiguous Tribes from committing hoſtilities on each other: And though he as no other means for enforcing theſe orders, except a few deſpicable ſoldiers, in the ſervice of the Company, they yet receive an humble and implicit obedience.

As there are no public roads in this, or the neighbouring Colonies, for any conſiderable diſtance, the only method of travelling is by water, in Yatches, with convenient tents, elegantly ornamented, and ſix, eight, or ten oars, rowed by Negroes, or Indians, and that always with the current of the tide, which ebbs and flows with irreſiſtible rapidity, in all theſe rivers, near two hundred miles from their entrance, by which you may conceive how level and even the country muſt be. When the current of the tide turns, the traveller ſtops, not at an inn, or tavern, for none are to be found, but at whatever plantation he chuſes, where, though an intire ſtranger, he is made welcome to every thing it can afford; the hoſpitality of this Colony not permitting money to be any where received for victuals or drink; and a ſtranger, on his arrival here, is every where welcome to board and lodging for months or years.

The Lands of this Colony, like those of Berbice, are granted gratis, upon conditional terms of settlement; and the Governor is appointed by the Company, with the approbation of the States General, who, with his Council, which are chosen by the Burghers, or their substitutes, compose the Legislative Authority, and impose such taxes as are requisite for the support of Government. They likewise form the Supreme Court of Judicature in Criminal and Civil Causes, from which, in the latter, Appeals are allowed to Holland for sums exceeding twelve hundred Guilders. This Court examines the evidences, and from their testimonies determines the cause, without hearing Counsel on either side. For this conduct they have several reasons. Multiplicity of law-suits are universally allowed to be particularly detrimental to new countries. Lawyers, they think, not only tend to promote them, but also to protract, embarrass; and perplex judicial proceedings. How far these conclusions are just, I will not determine; Right and Wrong, Justice and Injustice, are sometimes so obscure, that the assistance of Council may be useful; but where the Members of a Court of Judicature, as in the present case, are but little versed in study of Law, instead of acquiring useful information, they would be in danger of being misled by the subtilities of pleadings, and the arts of litigation. Besides, this would naturally enhance the expence of judicial determinations; to prevent which, the Government is here particularly sollicitous, to their honour I speak it, as in some countries the necessary expences in this particular have been so enormously augmented, not only by multiplicity of fees, but by stamps, and other duties, on the several instruments required, that the means of obtaining a judicial decision are beyond the reach, not only of the poor, but even of people in moderate circumstances, who, in effect, suffer an absolute deprivation of justice; whereas in this Colony, the whole expence of a Law-suit is but a single shilling for a Summons. I say a Summons, because the body of no inhabitant can be arrested except for a criminal offence: But the inconveniences which might result from this useful regulation are prevented, by a Law, which prohibits all inhabitants from leaving the Colony without a passport, which can only be obtained either by previously notifying the intention of departure, or by providing security for the discharge of any remaining debts.

The

The Company has reserved to itself the right of regulating our commerce for the mutual advantage of the Parent country and Colonies; but in exercising this right they have been particularly attentive to the interest of the latter, as they are sensible that colonization can only be promoted by indulgence, and though we are obliged to transmit our Sugar, Coffee, Cotton, Cocao, &c. to the Province of Sealand, yet we have liberty to export Rum, Melasses, Timber, &c. to foreign countries, and import from them all commodities which we want, without distinction, and uncharged with duties.

LETTERS. *)

A. Pope to Henry Cromwell Esq.

I have been so well satisfied with the country ever since I saw you, that I have not once thought of the town, or inquired of any one in it besides Mr. Wycherley and yourself. And from him I understand of your journey this summer into Leicestershire; from whence I guess you are returned by this time, to your old apartment in the widow's corner, to your old business of comparing critics; and to your old diversions of losing a game at piquet with the ladies, and half a play, or a quarter of a play, at the theatre: where you are none of the malicious audience, but the chief of amorous spectators; and for the infirmity of one sense ), which there for the most part, could only serve to disgust you, enjoy the vigour of another which ravishes you. So you have the advantage of being entertained with all the beauty of the boxes, without being troubled with any of the dulness of the stage. You are so good a critic, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear their works, and next, that you are not so arrant a critic, as to damn them (like the rest) without hearing.

I have an hundred things to say to you, which shall be deferred till I have the happiness of seeing you in town, for the season now draws on, that invites every body thither. Some of them I had communicated to you by letters before *) Alex. Pope's Works. Lond. 1752. 9 Vol. 8. &c.

) His hearing.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0215
DFG

this, if I had not been uncertain where you paſſed your time the laſt ſeaſon: So much fine weather, I doubt not, has given you all the pleaſure you could deſire from the country, and your own thoughts the beſt company in it. But nothing could allure Mr. Wycherley to our foreſt, he continued (as you told me long ſince he would) an obſtinate lover of the town, in ſpite of friendſhip and fair weather. Therefore henceforward, to all thoſe conſiderable qualities I know you poſſeſſed of, I ſhall add that of prophecy. But I ſtill believe Mr. Wicherley's intentions were good, and am ſatisfied that he promiſes nothing but with a real deſign to perform it: How much ſoever his other excellent qualities are above my imitation, his ſincerity, I hope, is not; and it is with the utmoſt that I am,

Sir, &c.

H. Cromwell to A. Pope.

Mr. Wicherley viſited me at Bath in my ſickneſs, and expreſſed much affection to me: Hearing from me how welcome his letters would be, he preſently wrote to you; in which I inſerted my ſcrawl, and after, a ſecond. He went to Glouceſter in his way to Salop, but was diſappointed of a boat, and ſo returned to the Bath; then he ſhewed me your anſwer to his letters, in which you ſpeak of my good nature, but, I fear, you found me very froward at reading; yet you allow for my illneſs. I could not poſſible be in the ſame houſe with Mr. Wycherley, though I ſought it earneſtly, nor come up to town with him, he being engaged with others; but whenever we met, we talked of you. He praiſes your poem *), and even outvies me in kind expreſſions of you. As if he had not wrote two letters to you, he was for writing every poſt; I put him in mind he had already. Forgive me this wrong; I know not whether my talking ſo much of your great humanity and tenderneſs to me, and love to him; or whether the return of his natural diſpoſition to you was the cauſe; but certainly you are now highly in his favour: Now he will come this winter to your houſe and I muſt go with him; but firſt he will invite you ſpeedily to town. — I arrived on Saturday laſt much wearied, yet had wrote ſooner, but was told by Mr. Gay (who gives you his ſervice) that you was gone from home. Lewis ſhewed me your letter, which ſet me right, *) Eſſay on Criticiſm.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0216
DFG

right, and your next letter is impatiently expected from me. Mr. Wycherley came to town on Sunday last, and kindly surprised me with a visit on Monday morning. We dined and drank together; and I saying, To our loves, he replied, it is Mr. Pope's health. He said he would go to Mr. Thorold's, and leave a letter for you. Though I cannot answer for the event of all this, in respect to him; yet I can assure you, that, when you please to come, you will be most desirable to me, as always by inclination, so now by duty, who shall ever be

Your, &c.

A. Pope to H. Cromwell.

I received, your letter the day after I had send you one of mine and I am but this morning returned hither. The news you tell me of the many difficulties you found in your return from Bath, gives me such a kind of pleasure as we usually take in accompanying our friends in their mixed adventures; for, methinks, I see you labouring through all your inconveniencies of the rough roads, the hard saddle, the trotting horse, and what not? What an agreeable surprise would it have been to me, to have met you by pure accident, (which I was within an ace of doing), and to have carried you off triumphantly, set you on an easier path, and relieved the wandering knight with a night's lodging and rural repast, at our castle in the forest? But these are only the pleasing imaginations of a disappointed lover, who must suffer in a melancholy absence yet these two months. In the mean time, I take up with the muses, for want of your better company.

I am highly pleased with the knowledge you give me of Mr. Wycherley's present temper, which seems so favourable to me. I shall ever have such a fund of affection for him as to be agreeable to myself when I am so to him, and cannot but be gay when he is in good humour. For what remains, I am so well, that nothing but the assurance of your being so can make me better; and if you would have me live with any satisfaction these dark days in which I cannot see you, it must be by your writing sometimes to

Your, &c.

Mr. Steele to Mr. Pope.

This is to desire of you that you would please to make an Ode as of a cheerful dying spirit, that is to say, the Emperor Adrian's Animula vagula put into two or three stanzas for music. If you comply with this, and send me word so, you will very particularly oblige

Your, &c.

Mr. Pope's Answer.

I do not send you word I will do, but have already done the thing you desire of me. You have it (as Cowley calls it) just warm from the brain. It came to me the first moment I waked this morning: Yet you will see it was not so absolutely inspiration, but that I had in my head not only the verses of Adrian, but the fine fragment of Sappho, &c.

Mr. Addison to Mr. Pope.

I was extremely glad to receive a letter from you, but more so upon reading the contents of it. The *) work you mention, will, I dare say, very sufficiently recommend itself when your name appears with the proposals: And if you think I can any way contribute to the forwarding of them, you cannot lay a greater obligation upon me than by employing me in such an office. As I have an ambition of having it known that you are my friend, I shall be very proud of showing it by this, or any other instance. I question not but your translation will enrich our tongue, and do honour to our country; for I conclude of it already from those performances with which you have obliged the public. I would only have you consider how it may most turn to your advantage. Excuse my impertinence in this particular, which proceeds from my zeal for your ease and happiness. The work would cost you a great deal of time, and, unless you undertake it, will, I am afraid, never be executed by any other; at least I know none of this age that is equal to it besides yourself.

I am at present wholly immersed in country-business, and begin to take delight in it. It wish I might hope to see you here some time, and will not despair of it, when you engage in a work that will require solitude and retirement. I am

Your, &c.

*) Translation of the Iliad.

Mr.

Mr. Addiſon to Mr. Pope.

I have received your letter, and am glad to find that you have laid ſo good a ſcheme for your great undertaking. I queſtion not but the proſe *) will require as much care as the poetry, but the variety will give yourſelf ſome relief, and more pleaſure to your readers.

You gave me leave once to take the liberty of a friend, in adviſing you not to content yourſelf with one half of the nation for your admirers, when you might command them all. If I might take the freedom to repeat it, I would on this occaſion. I think you are very happy that you are out of the fray, and I hope all your undertakings will turn to the better account for it.

You ſee how I preſume on your friendſhip in taking all this freedom with you: But I already fancy that we have lived many years together in an unreſerved converſation; and that we may do ſo many more, is the ſincere wiſh of

Your, &c.

Mr. Pope to Mr. Addiſon.

Your laſt is the more obliging, as it hints at ſome little niceties in my conduct, which your candour and affection prompts you to recommend to me, and which (ſo trivial as things of this nature ſeem) are yet of no ſlight conſequence, to people whom every body talks of and every body as he pleaſes. It is a ſort of tax that attends an eſtate in Parnaſſus, which is often rated much higher than in proportion to the ſmall poſſeſſion an author holds. For indeed an author, who is once come upon the town, is enjoyed without being thanked for the pleaſure, and ſometimes ill treated by thoſe very perſons who firſt debauched him. Yet, to tell you the bottom of my heart, I am no way diſpleaſed that I have offended the violent of all parties already; and at the ſame time I aſſure you conſcientiouſly, I feel not the leaſt malevolence or reſentment againſt any of thoſe who miſrepreſent me, or are diſſatisfied with me. This frame of mind is ſo eaſy, that I am perfectly content with my condition.

As I hope, and would flatter myſelf, that you know me and my thoughts ſo entirely as never to be miſtaken in either, ſo it is a pleaſure to me that you gueſſed ſo right in regard to the author of that Guardian you mentioned. But I am ſorry to find it has taken air that I have ſome hand in thoſe papers, becauſe

*) The notes to his tranſlation of Homer.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0219
DFG

becauſe I write ſo very few as neither to deſerve the credit of ſuch a report with ſome people, nor the diſrepute of it with others. An honeſt Jocobite ſpoke to me the ſenſe or nonſenſe of the weak part of his party very fairly, that the good people took it ill of me, that I wrote with Steele, though upon never ſo indifferent ſubjects: This, I know, you will laugh at as well as I do; yet I doubt not but many little calumniators and perſons of ſour diſpoſitions will take occaſion hence to beſpatter me. I confeſs I ſcorn narrow ſouls, of all parties, and if I renounce my reaſon in religious matters, I will hardly do it in any other.

I cannot imagine whence it comes to paſs that the few Guardians I have written are ſo generally known for mine: That in particular which you mention I never diſcovered to any man but the publiſher, till very lately: Yet almoſt every body told me of it.

As to his taking a more politic turn, I cannot any way enter into that ſecret, nor have I been let into it, any more than into the reſt of his politics. Though it is ſaid, he will take into theſe papers alſo ſeveral ſubjects of the politer kind, as before: But, I aſſure you, as to myſelf, I have quite done with them for the future. The little I have done, and the great reſpect I bear Mr. Steele as a man of wit, has rendered me a ſuſpected Whig to ſome of the violent; but (as old Dryden ſaid before me) it is not the violent I deſign to pleaſe.

I generally employ the mornings in painting with Mr. Jervas, and the evening in the converſation of ſuch as I think can moſt improve my mind, of whatever denomination they are. I ever muſt ſet the higheſt value upon men of truly great, that is, honeſt principles, with equal capacities. The beſt way I know of overcoming calumny and miſconſtruction, is by a vigorous perſeverance in every think we know to be right, and a total neglect of all that can enſue from it. It is partly from this maxim that I depend upon your friendſhip, becauſe I believe it will do juſtice to my intention in every thing; and give me leave to tell you, that (as the world goes) this is no ſmall aſſurance I repoſe in you. I am

Your, &c.

Mr.

Mr. Pope to the Earl of Halifax.

My Lord,

I am obliged to you both for the favours you have done me, and for those you intend me. I distrust neither your will nor your memory, when it is to do good: And if ever I become troublesome or solicitous, it must not be out of expectation, but out of gratitude. Your Lordship may either cause me to live agreeable in the town, or contentedly in the country, which is really all the difference I set between an easy fortune and a small one. It is indeed a high strain of generosity in you, to think of making me easy all my life, only because I have been so happy as to divert you some few hours: But if I may have leave to add, it is because you think me no enemy to my native country, there will appear a better reason; for I must of consequence be very much (as I sincerely am)

Your, &c.

Mr. Congreve to Mr. Pope.

I have the pleasure of your very kind letter. I have always been obliged to you for your friendship and concern for me, and am more affected with it, than I will take upon me to express in this letter. I do assure you there is no return wanting on my part, and am very sorry I had not the good luck to see the Dean before I left the town: It is a great pleasure to me, and not a little vanity to think that he misses me. As to my health, which you are so kind to inquire after, it is not worse than in London: I am almost afraid yet to say that it is better, for I cannot reasonably expect much effect from these waters in so short a time; but in the main they seem to agree with me. Here is not one creature that I know, which, next to the few I would chuse, contributes very much to my satisfaction. At the same time that I regret the want of your conversation, I please myself with thinking that you are where you first ought to be, and engaged where you cannot do too much. Pray, give my humble service, and best wishes to your good mother. I am sorry you do not tell me how Mr. Gay does in his health; I should have been glad to have heard he was better.

Your, &c.

Mr.

Mr. Pope to Mr. Fenton.

Sir,

I had not omitted anſwering yours of the 18th of laſt month, but out of a deſire to give you ſome certain and ſatisfactory account, which way, and at what time, you might take your journey. I am now commiſſioned to tell you, that Mr. Craggs will expect you on the riſing of the parliament, which will be as ſoon as he can receive you in the manner he would receive a man de belles lettres, that is, in tranquillity and full leiſure. I dare ſay your way of life (which, in my taſte, will be the beſt in the world, and with one of the beſt men in the world) muſt prove highly to your contentment. And, I muſt add, it will be ſtill the more a joy to me, as I ſhall reap a particular advantage from the good I ſhall have done in bringing you together, by ſeeing it in my own neighbourhood. Mr. Craggs has taken a houſe cloſe by mine, whither he propoſes to come in three weeks. In the mean time I heartily invite you to live with me; where a frugal and philoſophical diet, for a time, may give you a higher reliſh of that elegant way of life you will enter into after. I deſire to know by the firſt poſt how ſoon I may hope for you.

I am a little ſcandalized at your complaint that your time lies heavy on your hands, when the Muſes have put ſo many good materials into your head to employ them. As to your queſtion, What I am doing? I anſwer, Juſt what I have been doing ſome years, my duty; ſecondly relieving myſelf with neceſſary amuſements, or exerciſes, which ſhall ſerve me inſtead of phyſic as long as they can; thirdly, reading till I am tired; and laſtly, writing when I have no other thing in the world to do, or no friend to entertain in company.

My mother is, I thank God, the eaſier, if not the better, for my cares; and I am the happier in that regard, as well as in the conſciouſneſs of doing my beſt. My next felicity is in retaining the good opinion of honeſt men, who think me not quite undeſerving of it: and in finding no injuries from others hurt me, as long as I know myſelf. I will add the ſincerity with which I act towards ingenious and undeſigning men, and which makes me always (even by all natural bond) their friend; therefore believe me very affectionately

Your, &c.

Rev.

Rev. Dean Berckley to Mr. Pope.

I have long had it in my thoughts to trouble you with a letter, but was diſcouraged for want of ſomething that I could think worth ſending fifteen hundred miles. Italy is ſuch an exhauſted ſubject, that, I dare ſay, you would eaſily forgive my ſaying nothing of it: And the imagination of a poet is a thing ſo nice and delicate, that it is no eaſy matter to find out images capable of giving pleaſure to one of the few, who (in any age) have come up to that character. I am nevertheleſs lately returned from an iſland, where I paſſed three or four months; which, were it ſet out in its true colours, might, methinks, amuſe you agreeable enough for a minute or two. The iſland Inarime is an epitome of the whole earth, containing within the compaſs of eigtheen miles, a wonderful variety of hills, vales, ragged rocks, fruitful plains, and barren mountains, all thrown together in a moſt romantic confuſion. The air is in the hotteſt ſeaſon conſtantly refreſhed by cool breezes from the ſea. The vales produce excellent wheat and Indian corn, but are moſtly covered with vineyards intermixed with fruit-trees. Beſides the common kinds, as cherries, apricots, peaches &c. they produce oranges, limes, almonds, promegranates, figs, water-melons, and many other fruits unknown to our climates, which lie every where open to the paſſenger. The hills are the greater part covered to the top with vines, ſome with cheſnut groves, and others with thickets of myrtle and lentiſcus. The fields in the northern ſide are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Several fountains and rivulets add to the beauty of this landſcape, which is likewiſe ſet off by the variety of ſome barren ſpots, and naked rocks. But that which crowns the ſcene, is a large mountain, riſing out of the middle of the Iſland (once a terrible volcano,) its lower parts are adorned with vines and other fruits; the middle affords paſture to flocks of goats and ſheep; and the top is a ſandy pointed rock, from which you have the fineſt proſpect in the world, ſurveying at one view, beſides ſeveral pleaſant iſland lying at your feet, a tract of Italy about three hundred miles in length, the greateſt part of which hath been ſung by Homer and Virgil, as making a conſiderable part of the travels and adventures of their two heroes. The inhabitants of this delicious iſle, as they are without riches and honours, ſo are they without the vices and follies that attend them; and where they but as much ſtrangers to revenge, as they are to avarice and ambition, they migth in fact anſwer the poetical notions of the golden age. But they have got, as an alloy to their happineſs, an ill habit of murdering one another on ſlight offences. We had an inſtance of this the ſecond night after our arrival, a youth of eighteen being ſhot dead by our door: And yet, by the ſole ſecret of minding our own buſineſs, we found a means of living ſecurely among thoſe dangerous people. Would you know how we paſs the time at Naples? Our chief entertainment is the devotion of our neighbours: Beſides the gaiety of their churches (where folks go to ſee what they call una bella devozione i. e. a ſort of religious opera), they make fireworks almoſt every week, out of devotion; and (what is ſtill more ſtrange) the ladies invite gentlemen to their houſes, and treat them with muſic and ſweetmeats, out of devotion; in a word, were it not for this devotion of its inhabitants, Naples would have little elſe to recommend it, beſide the air and ſituation. Learning is in no very thriving ſtate here, as indeed no where elſe in Italy; however, among many pretenders, ſome men of taſte are to be met with. A friend of mine told me not long ſince, that, being to viſit Salvini at Florence, he found him reading your Homer: He liked the notes extremely, and could find no other fault with the verſion, but that he thought it approached too near a paraphraſe; which ſhews him not to be ſufficiently acquainted with our language. I wiſh you health to go on with that noble work, and when you have that, I need not wiſh you ſucceſs. You will do me the juſtice to believe, that whatever relates to your welfare is ſincerely whiſhed by

as

Your, &c.

Dr. Atterbury Biſhop of Rocheſter to Mr. Pope.

I had much ado to get hither laſt night, the water being ſo rough that the ferrymen were unwilling to venture. The firſt thing I ſaw this morning after my eyes were open, was your letter, for the freedom and kindneſs of which I thank you. Let all compliments be laid aſide between us for the future: and depend upon me as your faithful friend in all things within my power, as one that truly values you, and wiſhes you all manner of happineſs. I thank you and Mrs. Pope for my kind reception, which has left a pleaſing impreſſion upon me, that will not ſoon be effaced.

Lord

Lord * * has preſſed me terribly to ſee him at , and told me in a manner betwixt kindneſs and reſentment, that it is but a few miles beyond Twitenham.

I have but a little time left, and a great deal to do in it; and muſt expect that ill health will render a good ſhare of it uſeleſs; and therefore what is likely to be left at the foot of the account, ought by me to be cheriſhed, and not thrown away in compliments. You know the motto of my ſundial, Vivite, ait, fugio. I will, as far, as I am able, follow its advice, and cut off all unneceſſary avocations and amuſements. There are thoſe that intend to employ me this winter in a way which they do not like. If they perſiſt in their intentions, I muſt apply myſelf to the work they cut out for me, as well as I can. But withall, that ſhall not hinder me from employing myſelf alſo in a way which they do not like. The givers of trouble one day ſhall have their ſhare of it another; that at laſt they may be induced to let me be quiet, and live to myſelf, with the few (the very few) friends I like: For that is the point, the ſingle point, I now aim at; though I know, the generality of the world who are unacquainted with my intentions and views, think the very reverſe of this character belongs to me. I do not know how I have rambled into this account of myſelf; when I ſat down to write, I had no thought of making that any part of my letter.

You might have been ſure without my telling you, that my right-hand is at eaſe; elſe I ſhould not have overflowed at this rate. And yet I have not done; for there is a kind intimation at the end of yours, which I underſtood, becauſe it ſeems to tend towards employing me in ſomething that is agreeable to you. Pray explain yourſelf: and believe, that you have not an acquaintance in the world that would be more in earneſt on ſuch an occaſion than I; for I love you, as well as I eſteem you.

All the while I have been writing, pain, and a fine truſh have been ſeverally endeavouring to call off my attention; but both in vain: Nor ſhould I yet part with you, but that the turning over a new leaf, frights me a little, and makes me reſolve to break through a new temptation, before it has taken too faſt hold on me.

I am, &c.

Mr. Pope to Mr. Gay.

I am extremely glad to find by a letter of yours to Mr. Forteſcue, that you have received one from me; and I beg you to keep, as the greateſt of curioſities, that letter of mine which you received, and I never wrote.

But the truth is, that we were made here to expect you in a ſhort time, that I was upon the ramble moſt part of the ſummer, and have concluded the ſeaſon in grief, for the death of my poor father.

I ſhall not enter into a detail of my concerns and troubles, for two reaſons; becauſe I am really afflicted and need no airs of grief, and becauſe they are not the concerns and troubles of any but myſelf. But I think you (without too great a compliment) enough my friend, to be pleaſed to know he died eaſily, without a groan, or the ſickneſs of two minutes; in a word, as ſilently and peacefully as he lived.

I ſhould not forget to acknowledge your letter ſent from Aix; you told me then that writing was not good with the waters, and, I find ſince, you are of my opinion, that it is as bad without the waters. But, I fancy, it is not writing, but thinking, that is ſo bad with the waters; and then you might write without any manner of prejudice, if you wrote like our brother-poets of theſe days.

The Ducheſs, Lord Warwick, Lord Stanhope, Mrs. Bellenden, Mrs. Lepell, and I cannot tell who elſe, had your letters: Dr. Arbuthnot and I expect to be treated like friends. I would ſent my ſervices to Mr. Pulteney, but that he is out of favour at court; and make ſome compliment to Mrs. Pulteney, if ſhe were not a Whig. My Lord Burlington tells me ſhe has much outſhined all the French ladies, as ſhe did the Engliſh before.

Your, &c.

Mr. Pope to Mr. Gay.

No words can tell you the great concern I feel for you; I aſſure you it was not, and is not leſſened, by the immediate apprehenſion I have now every day lain under of loſing my mother. Be aſſured, no duty leſs than that ſhould have kept me one day from attending your condition: I would come and take a room by you at Hampſtead, to be with you daily, were ſhe not ſtill in danger of death. I have conſtantly had particular

particular accounts of you from the Doctor, which have not ceased to alarm me yet. God preserve your life, and restore your health. I really beg it for my own sake; for I feel I love you more than I thought in health, though I always loved you a great deal. If I am so unfortunate as to bury my poor mother, and yet have the good fortune to have my prayers heard for you, I hope we may live most of our remaining days together. If, as I believe, the air of a better clime, as the southern part of France, may be thought useful for your recovery, thither I would go with you infallibly; and it is very probable we might get the Dean with us, who is in that abandoned state already in which I shall shortly be, as to other cares and duties. Dear Gay, be as cheerful as your sufferings will permit: God is a better friend than a court; even any honest man is a better. I promise you my entire friendship in all events, heartily praying for your recovery.

Your, &c.

Do not write, if you are ever so able: The Doctor tells me all.

Mr. Pope to Dr. Swift.

It is not a time to complain that you have not answered me two letters (in the last of which I was impatient under some fears.) It is not now indeed a time to think of myself, when one of the nearest and longest ties I have ever had, is broken all on a sudden, by the unexpected death of poor Mr. Gay. An inflammatory fever hurried him out of this life in three days. He died last night at nine o'clock, not deprived of his senses entirely at last, and possessing them perfectly till within five hours. He asked of you a few hours before, when in acute torment by the inflammation in his bowels and breast. His effects are in the Duke of Queensberry's custody. His sisters, we suppose, will be his heirs, who are two widows: as yet it is not known whether or no he left a will.—Good God! how often are we to die before we go quite off this stage? In every friend we lose a part of ourselves, and the best part.

I shall never see you now, I believe; one of your principal calls to England is at an end. Indeed he was the most amiable by far; his qualities were the gentlest: But I love you as well and as firmly. Sure, if innocence and integrity can deserve happiness, it must be his. Adieu; I can add nothing but what you will feel, and diminish nothing from it. Yet write to me, and soon. Believe no man now living loves you better; I believe no man ever did, than

A. Pope.

D. Arbuthnot, whose humanity you know, heartily commends himself to you. All possible diligence and affection has been shown, and continued attendance on this melancholy occasion. Once more adieu, and write to one who is truly disconsolate

P. S. by Dr. Arbuthnot.

Dear Sir,

I am sorry that the renewal of our correspondence should be upon such a melancholy occasion. Poor Mr. Gay died of an inflammation, and, I believe, at last a mortification of the bowels. It was the most precipitate case I ever knew, having cut him off in three days. He was attended by two physicians besides myself. I believed the distemper mortal from the beginning. I have not had the pleasure of a line from you these two years. I wrote one about your health, to which I had no answer. I wish you all health and happiness; being, with great affection and respect, Sir,

Your, &c.

Mr. Pope to Mr. Warburton.

Yours is very full and very kind, it is a friendly and satisfactory answer, and all I can desire. Do but instantly fulfill it. — Only I hope this will find you before you set out. For I think (on all considerations) your best way will be to take London in your way. It will secure you from accidents of weather to travel in the coach, both thither, and from thence hither. But in particular, I think you should take some care as to Mr. G's executors. And I am of opinion, no man will be more serviceable in settling any such accounts than Mr. Knapton, who so well knows the trade, and is of so acknowledged a credit in it. If you can stay but a few days there, I should be glad; though I would not have you omit any necessary thing to yourself. I wish too you would just see , though, when you have passed, a month here, it will be time enough, for all we have to do in town; and they

they will be less busy, probably, than just before the session opens, to think of men of letters.

When you are in London, I beg a line from you, in which pray tell us what day you shall arrive at Bath by the coach, that we may send to meet you, and bring you hither.

You will owe me a real obligation by being made acquainted with the master of this house; and by sharing with me, what I think one of the chief satisfactions of my life, his friendship. But whether I shall owe you any in contributing to make me a scribler again, I know not.

Mr. Pope to Mr. Warburton.

I am forced to grow every day more laconic in my letters, for my eyesight grows every day shorter and dimmer. Forgive me then that I answer you summarily. I can even less bear an equal part in a correspondence than in a conversation with you. But be assured once for all, the more I read of you, as the more I hear from you, the better I am instructed and pleased. And this misfortune of my own dulness, and my own absence, only quickens my ardent wish that some good fortune would draw you nearer, and enable me to enjoy both, for a greater part of our lives in this neighbourhood; and in such a situation, as might make more beneficial friends than I, esteem and enjoy you equally. — I have again heard from Lord  and another hand, that the Lord *) I writ to you of, declares an intention to serve you. My answer (which they related to him) was, that he would be sure of your acquaintance for life, if once he served or obliged you; but that I was certain you would never trouble him with your expectation, though he would never get rid of your gratitude. — Dear Sir, adieu; and let me be sometimes certified of your health. My own is as usual, and my affection the same, always yours.

Mr. Pope to Mr. Warburton.

I am sorry to meet you with so bad an account of myself, who should otherwise with joy have flown to the interview. I am too ill to be in town; and within this week so much, as to make my journey thither, at present, impracticable, even if there was no proclamation in my way. I left the town in a decent compliance to that; but this additional prohibition from the higheſt of all powers I muſt bow to without murmuring. I wiſh to ſee you here. Mr. Allen comes not till the 16th; and you will probably chuſe to be in town chiefly while he is there. I received yours juſt now, and I writ to hinder * * from printing the comment on the uſe of riches too haſtily, ſince what you write me, intending to have forwarded it otherwiſe, that you might reviſe it during your ſtay. Indeed my preſent weakneſs will make me leſs and leſs capable of any thing. I hope at leaſt, now at firſt, to ſee you for a day or two here at Twitenham, and concert meaſures how to enjoy for the future what I can of your friendſhip.

*) Granville.

I am, &c.

A Letter from Abr. Caſtres, Eſq. Envoy Extraordinary to the King of Portugal.

Sir, Liſbon. Nov. 6. 1765.

You will, in all likelihood, have heard before this of the inexpreſſible calamity befallen the whole maritime coaſt, and in particular this opulent city, now reduced to heap of rubbiſh & ruins, by a moſt tremendous earthquake on the 1ſt of this month, followed by a conflagration, which has done ten times more miſchief than the earthquake itſelf. I gave a ſhort account of our misfortune to Sir Benjamin Keene, by a Spaniard, who promiſed, as all intercourſe by poſt was at a ſtand, to carry my letter as far as Badajoz, and ſee it ſafe put into the Poſt-houſe. It was merely to acquaint his Exellency, that, God be praiſed, my houſe ſtood out the ſhocks, tho' greatly damaged; and that happening to be out of the reach of the flames, ſeveral of my friends, burnt out of their houſes, had taken refuge with me, where I have accomodated them, as well as I could, under tents in my large garden; nobody but Lord Charles Douglas, who is actually on board the packet, beſides our chaplain and myſelf, having dared hitherto to ſleep in my houſe ſince the day of our diſaſter.

The conſul and his family have been ſaved, and are all well in a Country houſe near this city. Thoſe with me at preſent, are the Dutch Miniſter, his Lady, and their three Children, with ſeven or eight of their ſervants. The reſt of my company, of the better ſort, conſiſts of ſeveral Merchants of this this factory, who, for the most part have lost all they had; tho' some, indeed, as Mrs. Purry and Mellish's house, and Mr. Raymond and Mr. Burrell's, have had the good fortune to save their cash, either in whole or in part. The number of dead and wounded I can give no certain account of as yet; in that respect our poor factory has escaped pretty well, considering the number of houses we have here.

I have lost my good and worthy friend the Spanish ambassador, who was crushed under his door, as he attempted to make his escape into the street. This, with the anguish I have been in for these five days past, occasioned by the dismal accounts brought to us every instant of the accidents befallen one or other of our acquaintance among the nobility, who, for the most part, are quite undone, has greatly affected me; but in particular the miserable objects among the lower sort of his majesty's subjects, who all fly to me for bread, and lie scattered up and down in my garden, with their wives and children. I have helped them all hitherto, and shall continue to do so as long as provisions do not fail us, which I hope will not be the case, by the good orders Mr. de Carvalho has issued in that respect. One of our great misfortunes is, that we have neither an English nor Dutch man of war in this harbour. Some of our carpenters and sailors would have been of great use to me on this occasion, in helping to prop up my house; for as the weather, which has hitherto been remarkable fair, seems to threaten us with heavy rains, it will be impossible for the refugees in my garden to hold it out much longer; and how to find room in my house for them all, I am at a loss to devise, for the floors of most of them shake under our feet, and must consequently be too weak to bear any number of fresh inhabitants.

The roads for the first days having been impracticable, it was but yesterday I had the honour, in company with M. de la Calmelte of waiting upon the King of Portugal, and all the royal family, at Belem, whom we found encamped, none of the royal palaces being fit to harbour them. Tho' the loss of his most faithful majesty has sustained on this occasion is immense, and his capital city is utterly destroyed, yet he received us with more serenety than we expected; and, among other things, told us, that he owed great thanks to providence for saving his and his family's lives; and that he was extremely glad to see us both safe. The queen in her own name and all the young princesses, sent us word, that they were obliged to us for our attention, but that being under their tents, and in a dress not fit to appear in, they desired that for the present we would excuse their admitting our compliments in person.

Most of the considerable families in our factory have already secured to themselves a passage to England by three or four London traders, that are preparing for their departure. As soon as the fatigue and great trouble of mind I have endured for these first days are a little over, I shall be considering of some proper method for sheltering the poorer sort, either by hiring a Portuguese hulk, or, if that is not to be had, some English vessel, till they can be sent to England: There are many who desire to remain, in hopes of finding among the ruins some of the little cash they may have left in their habitations.

The best orders have been given for preventing rapine and murders, frequent instances of which we have had within these three days, there being swarms of Spanish deserters in town, who take hold of this opportunity of doing their business. As I have large sums deposited in my house, belonging to such of my countrymen as have been happy enough to save some of their cash, and as my house was surrounded all night with ruffians, I have this morning written to M. de Carvalho, to desire a guard, which I hope will not be refused.

We are to have in a day or two a meeting of our scattered factory at my house, to consider of what is best to be done in our present wretched circumstances. I am determined to stay within call of the distressed as long as I can remain on shore with the least appearance of security; and the same Mr. Hay seemed resolved to do the last time I conferred with him about it.

I must humbly beg your pardon, Sir, for the disorder of this letter, surrounded as I am by the many in distress, who, from one instant to another, are applying to me either for advice or shelter. The packet has been detained at the desire of the factory, till another appears from England, or some man of war drops in here for the Streights. This will go by the first of several of our merchant ships bound to England. I must not forget to acquaint you, that Sir Harry Frankland and lady are safe and well.

Castres.

Lord

Lord Littleton to James Boswell Esq.

London. Febr. 21. 1768.

Sir,

I think myself greatly obliged to you, and desire you to accept my most grateful thanks, for the valuable present you have done me the honour to make me, of your Account of Corsica, which has given me the pleasure of being more perfectly acquainted with the greatest Character of this age: I had gained some knowledge of it, before I saw your book, from the letters of another English gentleman on that subject; but you have added many curious and interesting particulars, which I have read with much delight and admiration. If I were a few years younger, I would go in pilgrimage to Corsica (as you have done) to visit this living image of ancient virtue and to venerate in the Mind of Pascal Paoli the spirit of Timoleon and Epaminondas. But most now be content with seeing him in your description, the vivacity of which shews that your heart is inflamed with the same generous passion which glows so brightly in his wish with you, that our government had shewn more respect for Corsican liberty; and think it disgraces our Nation, that we do not live in friendship with a brave people, engaged in the noblest of all conquests; a contest against tyranny! and who have never given us any cause of complaint. Besides sympathy of sentiment, which is a natural bond of union, we ought in policy to shew as much regard for them, as the Genoese their oppressors have shewn for the French in our late war with that nation. Believe me with sincere regard and esteem your most obedient, and obliged humble servant

Sir

Littleton.

DESCRIPTION OF SOME QUADRUPEDS.*)

Animals of the Ape kind are in Guiana in greater number and variety, than in any other part of the known world.

*) Bancroft's Essay on the Natural History of Guiana. London 1769. 8.

The Orang-Outang in this part of America is much larger than either the African or Oriental, if the accounts of the natives may be relied on; for I do not find that any of them have been ſeen by the White Inhabitants on this coaſt, who never penetrate far into the woods. Theſe animals, in all the different languages of the natives, are called by names ſignifying a Wild Man. They are repreſented by the Indians as being near five feet in height, maintaining an erect poſition, and having a human form, thinly covered with ſhort black hair; but I ſuſpect that their height has been augmented by the fears of the Indians, who greatly dread them, and inſtantly fly as ſoon as one is diſcovered, ſo that none of them have ever been taken alive, much leſs any attempts made for taming them. The Indians relate many fabulous ſtories of theſe animals; and, like the inhabitants of Africa and the Eaſt, aſſert, that they will attack the males, and raviſh the females of the human ſpecies.

The Ape, here called a Quato, is large, and covered all over with long black hair, except the face, which is bald, and wrinkded. The ears are large, and of a human form, the eyes deeply ſunk in their orbits, and the noſe very much reſembling that of a Negro, but ſmaller. The body is near two feet in length, and round the thorax about eighteen inches in circumference. They have neither beard nor tail. Theſe animals are frequently tamed, and in all their actions demonſtrate an uncommon degree of art and dexterity, not without a mixture of that miſchievous ſagacity for which they are remarkable. When their hands or fore feet are tied behind the back, they will walk and run in an erect poſition for a whole day, with the ſame eaſe and familiarity as though they were in their natural poſture. When one of theſe animals is beat, he immediatily runs and climbs a lemon or orange tree; and, if he is purſued, will pick the lemons and oranges, and drop them on the head of the purſuer, and even endeavour to repel him by voiding his excrements upon him, at the ſame time making a variety of grimaces, and aſſuming a thouſand ridiculous attitudes, which afford no ſmall diverſion to the ſpectators.

The Howling Baboons, as they are here called, ſeem to be the animals which are called by the natives of Braſil, Guereba. They are of the ſize of a fox, covered with fine ſmooth hair, of a ſhining black, except on the legs, where it is of a browniſh cheſnut colour. The viſage of this animal is erect, and pretty much resembles that of the Quato, but its ears are smaller, the eyes more prominent, and the chin is covered with a long streight black beard. They have a long tail, which is almost naked towards the end, the hair being probably worn off, by frequently clasping round the branches of trees, when they remove from one to another. They are the most numerous and vociferous of all the Monkey tribe, and frequently assemble by hundreds, both by night and day, and set up an incessant loud disagreeable howling, which is heard at a great distance, and is not a little troublesome to the inhabitants. Sometimes the howling is kept up only by one for several minutes, until the rest join in the chorus; but these intermissions are not very frequent, as they seem to abhor taciturnity at these assemblies, and are unwilling to deny themselves the pleasure of contributing a share to this noisy entertainment. Besides these, there is another Monkey, somewhat larger than the howling Monkey, which is covered with long reddish hair, having large ears, a long red beard, and a long bushy tail. These animals, if possible, make a more hideous yell than the former; but happily their meetings are less frequent.

is

As the Orang-Outang is the largest, so the Saccawinkee is the smallest of the Ape tribe in Guiana. Its name is of Indian origin, though it has been adopted by the White Inhabitants. The body of a Saccawinkee, from the head to the root of the tail, is about six inches in length: the tail is about nine inches long, and covered with very long black hair: the head is small, as are the ears, which are almost round; the nose is slender and flat, and the eyes somewhat prominent, and of a shining black colour: the face is covered with a fine white downy hair, and the body is cloathed with long hair, of a shining black, except at the points, where is it white. These animals are frequently tamed, and their tricks and gestures are not a little diverting; but they can never be divested of a mischievous disposition, for which they are remarkable, and which seems constitutional.

Between the Quato and Saccawinkee there are numerous species of these animals, of intermediate sizes, of which it would be impossible to convoy distinct ideas by verbal descriptions, were I able to give them; but notwithstanding I have resided in Guiana near three years, I can by no means pretend to have seen all the different species of these animals, almost every day presenting a different kind to my observation, either in poſſeſſion of the Indians, or in the woods, where they are ſo numerous, that ſcores are often in view at once. Nor are theſe animals a little troubleſome, as they frequently rob the plantations of fruit, maize, rice, &c. Theſe expeditions they undertake with great ſagacity, ever uſing the precaution to place a centinel on a commodious high tree, to announce the approach of an enemy; a duty to which, it is ſaid, they ſubmit alternately; and that when they are ſurprized through the negligence or inattention of their centinel, they puniſh him ſeverely.

in

---

*) There is a ſort of BABOON at the Cape of Good Hope, with a head reſembling that of a Dog, with very ugly and frightful features. However the fore part of the body much reſembles that of a man; but the teeth are large and ſharp. The fore feet are very like hands; and thoſe behind reſemble mens. Their whole body is covered with hair, except the thighs, which are quite bare, and full of ſcratches.

When they are in great diſtreſs, that is, when they are hunted by Dogs, or are beaten for any fault, they ſigh, groan, and weep, like human creatures in a fright, or that are in great pain. They are very fond of grapes, apples, and all ſorts of fruit in general that grow in the gardens. When they get into a vineyard where the grapes are ripe, they fill themſelves ſo immoderately with them, that they may be eaſily taken. Their fingers are armed with nails and claws that render them formidable to Dogs, which for that reaſon cannot eaſily take them. When they perceive any paſſenger in the fields that is obliged tho dine in the open air, he muſt be very attentive, otherwiſe they wy certainly carry off ſome of his victuals. If they ſucceed they make ſo many grimaces, and put themſelves into ſuch ridiculous poſtures, that a man muſt be very melancholy indeed to forbear laughing at them.

Theſe animals are under ſome ſort of diſcipline, and go about what they undertake with ſuch ſkill, cunning, and foreſight, that are very wonderful. As for inſtance when they rob an orchard, a garden, or a vineyard. They go upon theſe expeditions in large companies, and part of them enter the incloſure while one is ſet to watch; and the reſt ſtand without the fence, and form a ſort of a line, which runs from the place they are pillaging to that of their rendevous. Every thing

*) R. Brookes's M. D. Natural Hiſtory of Quadrupeds, with cuts. London 1763. 6 Vol. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0236
DFG

thing being thus disposed, the Baboons within the orchard, throw the fruit to those that are without as fast as they gather it; or if the hedge or wall be high, to those that sit thereon, who deliver them to those without; and so on all along the line, which usually terminates in some mountain. They catch the fruit as readily as the most skilful player can a ball. While this is doing they keep a deep silence, and perform their work extremely quick. When the centinel perceives any one coming he sets up a great cry, and at this signal the whole company disappear in an instant. The Dutch at the Cape sometimes take the young ones of these Baboons, and feed them with Goat's or Sheep's milk. When they are tamed and grown up, they watch the house as carrefully as the best Dog in Europe.

The American BEAVER, is now better known than the others, for of this we have a very exact description from the Memoires of the Royal Academy as Paris. The hair which covers the whole body, except the tail, is not alike troughout; for there are two sorts mixed together, which differ not only in length, but in colour and thickness. Part of it is about an inch and a half long, and as thick as the hair of a man's head, very shining, and of a brown colour, inclining somewhat to a tawney. It is of a close substance, and so solid, that no cavity can be perceived with a microscope.

The shortest is about an inch long, and is in greater plenty than the European; it is likewise more small and soft, insomuch, that it feels almost like silk. This difference of the hair or fur, is to be met with in several animals; but more particularly in the Beaver, the Otter, and the Wild Boar; which perhaps may be the more necessary for these creatures, because they delight in muddy places, and the longest hair may serve to keep the mud from penetrating to the skin.

The head from the nose to the hind part, is five inches and a half long, and five inches broad from the prominence of the two cheek bones. The ears are like those of an Otter, being round, and very short: They are covered with hair on the outside, but are almost naked within.

It is commonly said that these animals delight in gnawing of trees, and in reality, the teeth seem to be very proper for that purpose, especially those before; but they are not sharp pointed to serve instead of a saw, as some have affirmed, or at lest, they are not so in the American Beaver; but they are proper to cut with, like those of Squirrels, Procupines, and Rats.

The

The ſtructure of the feet is very extraordinary, and ſhew plainly, that nature deſigned theſe animals to live as well in the water as on the land. For though they have four feet like terreſtial animals; yet thoſe behind are as fit for ſwimming as walking, and the five toes of which they conſiſt, are joined together like thoſe of a Gooſe; but in ſhape, they are like the hand of a man, only they are covered with hair on the outſide, and the nails are long and ſharp. Many authors have ſaid, that the Beaver in moſt things reſembles an Otter; but now it plainly appears they were miſtaken. The Academiſts of Paris ſuppoſe, that this error may have ariſen from their having ſeen the Beavers of Europe only; becauſe as they affirm, the European are webfooted before like Geeſe; whereas thoſe of America are only ſo in their hind feet; and therefore, the account of Geſner, muſt have been taken partly from theſe laſt.

The length of the fore feet is ſix inches and a half from the elbow to the end of the longeſt finger, and three inches from the beginning of the hand to the ſame extremity. The hind feet are the longeſt, being ſix inches from the extremity of the heel to the end of the longeſt toe, which is the ſecond. Beſides the five fingers and toes which have nails at the end, are a little ſlanting in their ſhape, and hollow in the inſide like quills, there is on the external part of each foot both before and behind, a little bone which makes a protuberance, and might be taken for a ſixth finger if it had been ſeparated from the foot; but as it is not, it ſeems to be deſigned to give more firmneſs and ſtrength thereto.

The tail has ſomewhat that reſembles a fiſh, and ſeems to have no manner of relation to the reſt of the body, which is like that of a land animal. It is covered with a ſkin, furniſhed with ſcales that are joined together by a pellicle. Theſe ſcales are of the thickneſs of parchment, above a line and a half in length, and generally of the figure of a hexagon, having ſix corners. Thoſe under the tail differ but little from thoſe above, except in having two or three little hairs on each. The colour is of a greyiſh brown, inclining a little to that of ſlate. When the ſkin of a Beaver is dreſſed, the ſcales fall off, but leave their print behind them. When the tail was diſſected the fleſh was pretty flat, and was not unlike that of large fiſh. It is about eleven inches in length, and at the root not above two broad; but it grows broader as it approaches the middle, where it is three inches, and then it grows leſs again to the end, where it terminates in an oval. It is about two inches thick near the root; but grows gradually thinner to the very end; insomuch, that it is no more than an inch thick in the middle, and not quite half one at the extremity.

to

Several writers have taken notice of the ingenuity of American Beavers in making their houses, of which I shall now give some account. The first thing they do when they are about to build, is to assemble in companies, sometimes of two or three hundred together; then they chuse a place where plenty of provisions are to be had, and where all necessaries are to be found proper for their use. Their houses are always in the water, and when they can find neither lake nor pond, they endeavour to supply that defect by stopping the current of a brook or small river, by means of a dam. To this end they first cut down trees in the following manner: Three or four Beavers will go to work about a large tree, and by continually gnawing of it with their teeth, they at last throw it down, and so contrive matters that it always falls towards the water, that they may have the less way to carry it, when they have divided it into pieces. After they have done this, they take each piece by itself, and roll it towards the water, where they intend to place it.

These pieces are more or less thick and long, according to the nature and situation of the places where they are required. Sometimes they make use of the large trunks of trees, which they lay down flat; sometimes the dam only consists of branches as thick as one's thigh, wich are supported by stakes interwoven with the branches of trees; and all the vacant places ere filled up with a sort of clay, in such a manner, that no water can pass through them. They prepare the clay with their paws or hands, and their tails serve instead of a carriage, as well as a trowel to lay on their clay.

The foundations of the dams are generally ten or twelve feet thick, and they lessen gradually till they come to two or three. They always observe an exact proportion, insomuch, that the most curious architects are not capable of performing their work more regularly. That side towards the current of the water is always sloping, but the other is perpendicular.

The construction of the houses is altogether as wonderful; for they are generally built upon piles in small lakes, which are formed by making of the dams. Sometimes they are on the bank of a river, or on the extremity of a point of land, which which advances into the water. They are of a round or oval form, and the top of them is like a dome.

This deſcription of one of their houſes which was examined and meaſured, will perhaps give the reader more ſatisfaction than an account in general. This of which I am now ſpeaking, was about three parts ſurrounded with water, and the other part was joined to the land. It was round, with an oval dome at the top, and the height above the ſurface of the water was eight feet. It was about forty feet in diameter, and one hundred and twenty in circumference: which perhaps may ſeem ſtrange, becauſe the proportion is geometrical; this however, is fact for it was meaſured ſeveral times. The part that joined to the bank was not made out of it, but was of the ſame materials with the reſt.

The bottom of the houſe was of earth, or ſoil, with pieces of wood laid in it, above three inches in circumference; then a parcel of poplar ſticks laid with one end in the houſe, and another ſlanting a long way under water; then a layer of earth again, and then poplar ſticks, which were repeated to the height of eighteen inches. From thence to the top of the houſe there was a mixture of earth, ſtones, and ſticks, curiouſly put together; and the whole was covered with ſods, that had long graſs growing thereon. The largeſt pieces of wood made uſe of near the top, were about three inches in diameter, and all the reſt was ſmall ſtuff, not above two or three fingers thick.

The outermoſt part of this houſe did not ſtand farther out in the creek than the edge of the ſhore; but that which brought the water almoſt round the houſe were the trenches, which were made by taking out the earth; theſe were nine feet in the broadeſt part, and eighteen feet in length. The creek at the front of the houſe was ſix and thirty feet broad, and ſeemed to be pretty deep. The houſe was ſo contrived as to be very ſolid, for there was no breaking into it without an ax; and in the froſty ſeaſon it was quite impenetrable. From this houſe there were ſeveral paths into the wood, through which they drew the ſticks and trees, which they made uſe of for food or building.

The wall of the houſe was two feet thick; and it was covered with ſmooth clay on the inſide in ſuch a manner, that it would not admit the leaſt breath of air. Two thirds of the ſtructure was out of the water; and in the upper part, each Beaver had his particular place, whereon leaves were ſtrewed to lie upon.

There

There never was any filth seen in any of these houses, which are made like an oven in the inside, with a passage for these animals to go and bathe in the water. One of these will generally lodge about eight or ten Beavers, though sometimes they have held thirty; but this is very uncommon.

The creatures are never surprized by the frost and snow; for they finish their work towards the end of September, and then they lay in provisions for the winter. In the summer time they live upon fruits, and the barks and leaves of trees; and they likewise catch small fish, and particularly Crabs or Craw-fish. However, their winter provision is the tender branches of trees, particularly poplar, of which they seem to be very fond. It is usually said, and upon pretty good authority, that these Beavers make the walls of their houses of a thickness, in proportion to the severity of the succeeding winter, which if true, these animals must be furnished with uncommon foresight.

When there are great floods caused by the melting of the snow, which damage the houses of the Beavers, they then leave them, and shift for themselves as well as they can; however, the females return as soon as the waters are abated; but the males keep the field till July, when they assemble again to repair the damage that has been done by the flood, either to their houses or dams. When any of their houses are demolished by the hunters, they never repair them again, but build others quite new. Several authors have said, that the Beavers make several rooms in their houses; but this upon examination has been found to be false.

In hunting the Beavers, the savages sometimes shoot them, always getting on the contrary side of the wind; for they are very shy, quick in hearing, and of a very keen scent. This is generally done when the Beavers are at work, or on shore feeding on poplar bark. If they hear any noise when at work, they immediately jump into the water, and continue there some time; and when they rise, it is at a distance from the place where they went in.

They sometimes are taken with traps; these are nothing but poplar sticks laid in a path near the water; which when the Beaver begins to feed upon, they cause a large log of wood to fall upon their necks, which is put in motion by their moving of the sticks; and consequently requires an ingenious contrivance. The savages generally prefer this way of taking them, because it does not damage their skins.

In the winter time they break the ice in two places at a distance from the house, the one behind the other. Then they take away the broken ice with a kind of a racket, the better to see where to place their stakes. They fasten their nets to these, which have large meshes, and sometimes are eighteen or twenty yards in length. When these are fixed, they proceed to demolish the house, and turn a Dog therein, which terrifying the Beaver he immediately leaves it, and takes to the water, after which, he is soon entangled by the net.

Mr. Lawson who was general surveyor of North Carolina, affirms, that Beavers are very plenty in that country. He confirms what has been said about their ingenuity in building of their dams and houses, and observes, that their food is chiefly the barks of trees and shrubs; such as that of the sassafras, ash, sweet gum, and several others. He adds, that if they are taken young, they will become very tame; but then they will do a great deal of mischief in the orchards, by breaking the trees. They will likewise block up the doors of the houses in the night, with the sticks and wood which they bring thither. He farther informs us, that it is certain death for them to eat any thing that is salt. The flesh is looked upon as very delicate food; but the tail is the greatest dainty, and is in great request.

SOME CHAPTERS OUT OF THE HISTORY OF TOM JONES A FOUNDLING *)

Book IV. Chap. 4. 8 and 10.

This matter, then, which put an end to the debate mentioned in the last chapter, was no other than a quarrel between Master Blifil and Tom Jones, the consequence of which had been a bloody nose to the former; for though Mr. Blifil, notwithstandig he was the younger, was in size above other's match, yet Tom was much his superior at the noble art of boxing.

Tom, however, cautiously avoided all engagements with that youth; for besides that Tommy Jones was an inoffensive lad amidst all his roguery, and really loved Blifil, Mr. Thwakum being always the second of the latter, would have been sufficient to deter him.

But

*) The Works of Henry Fielding Esq. Vol. 8. London 1762. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0242
DFG

But well says a certain Author, no man is wise at all hours; it is therefore no wonder that a boy is not so. A difference arising at play between the two lads, Mr. Blifil called Tom a beggarly bastard. Upon which the latter, who was somewhat passionate in his disposition, immediately caused that phænomenon in the face of the former, which we have above remembered.

Mr. Blifil now, with his blood running from his nose, and the tears galloping after from his eyes, appeared before his uncle and the tremendous Thwackum; in which court an indictment of assault, battery, and wounding, was instantly prefered against Tom; who, in his excuse, only pleaded the provocation, which was indeed all the matter that Mr. Blifil had omitted.

It is indeed possible, that this circumstance might have escaped his memory: for, in his reply, he positively insisted, that he had made use of no such appellation; adding. "Heaven "forbid such naughty words should ever come out of his "mouth."

Tom, though against all form of law, rejoined in affirmance of the words. Upon which Mr. Bilfil said, "It is no "wonder; those who will tell one fib, will hardly stick at "another. If I had told my master such a wicked fib as you "have done, I should be ashamed to shew my face."

"What fib, child," cries Thwackum, pretty eagerly.

"Why, he told you that nobody was with him shooting "when he killed the partridge; but he knows, (here he burst "into a flood of tears) yes, he knows; for he confessed it to "me, that Black George the gamekeeper was there. Nay, "he said, — yes you did, — deny it if you can, that "you would not have confessed the truth, tho' master had cut "you to pieces."

At this the fire flashed from Thwackum's eyes, and he cried out in triumph, "Oh! oh this is your mistaken "notion of honour! this is the boy who was not to be whipped "again! But Mr. Allworthy," with a more gentle aspect, turned towards the lad, and said, "Is this true, child! How "came you to persist so obstinately in a falsehood?"

Tom said, "He scorned a lie as much as any one; but "he thought his honour engaged him to act as he did; for "he had promised the poor fellow to conceal him: which," he said, "he thought himself farther obliged to, as the "gamekeeper had begged him, not to go into the gentleman's

"manor, and had at last gone himself in compliance with his "persuasions." He said, this was the whole truth of the matter, and he would take his oath of it; and concluded with very passionately begging Mr. Allworthy, "to have "compassion on the poor fellow's family, especially as he "himself only had been guilty, and the other had been very "difficultly prevailed on to do what he did. Indeed, Sir," said he, "it could hardly be called a lie that I told; for the "poor fellow was intirely innocent of the whole matter. I "should have gone alone after the birds; nay, I did go at "first, and he only followed me to prevent more mischief. "Do, pray Sir, let me be punished; take my little horse "away again; but pray, Sir, forgive poor George."

Mr. Allworthy hesitated a few moments, and then dismissed the boys, advising them to live more friendly and peaceably together.

The reader may remember, that Mr. Allworthy gave Tom Jones a little horse, as a kind of smart-money for the punishment which he imagined he had suffered innocently.

This horse Tom kept above half a year, and then rode him to a neighbouring fair, and sold him.

At his return, being questioned by Thwackum, what he had done with the money for which the horse was sold, he frankly declared he would not tell him.

"Oho!" says Thwackum, "you will not! them I will "have it out of your br—h;" that being the place to which he always applied for information on every doubtful occasion.

Tom was now mounted on the back of a footman, and every thing prepared for execution, when Mr. Allworthy entering the room, gave the criminal a reprieve, and took him with him into another apartment; where being alone with Tom, he put the same question to him which Thwackum had before asked him.

Tom answered, he could in duty refuse him nothing; but as for that tyrannical rascal, he would never make him any other answer than with a cudgel, with which he hoped soon to be able to pay him for all his barbarities.

Mr. Allworthy very severely reprimanded the lad, for his indecent and disrespectful expressions concerning his master, but much more for his avowing an intention of revenge. He threatned him with the entire loss of his favour, if he ever heard heard such another word from his mouth; for he said he would never support or befriend a reprobate. By these and the like declarations, he extorted some compunction from Tom, in which that youth was noth over sincere; for he really meditated some return for all the smarting favours he had received at the hands of the pedagogue. He was, however, brought by Mr. Allworthy to express a concern for his resentment against Thwackum; and then the good man, after some wholesome admonition, permitted him to proceed, which he did, as follows.

"Indeed, my dear Sir, I love and honour you more than "all the world: I know the great obligations I have to you, "and should detest myself, if I thought my heart was capable "of ingratitude. Could the little horse you gave me speak, "I am sure he could tell you how fond I was of your present: "for I had more pleasure in feeding him than in riding him. "Indeed, Sir, it went to my heart to part with him; nor "would I have sold him upon any other account in the world "than what I did. You yourself, Sir, I am convinced, in "my case, would have done the same; for none ever so "sensibly felt the misfortunes of others. What would you feel, "dear Sir, if you thought yourself the occasion of them! — "Indeed, Sir, there never was any misery like theirs. — "Like whose, child?„ says Allworthy: "What do you "mean? Oh, Sir,„ answered Tom, "your poor game- "keeper, with all his large family, ever since you discharged "him, have been perishing with all the miseries of cold and "hunger, I could not bear to see these poor wretches naked "and starving, and at the same time know myself to have been "the occasion of all their sufferings. — I could not bear it, „Sir, upon my soul, I could not.„ (Here the tears run down his cheeks, and he thus proceeded:) "It was to save "them from absolute destruction, I parted with your dear "present, notwithstanding all the value I had for it: — I "sold the horse for them, and they have every farthing of "the money.„

Mr. Allworthy now stood silent for some moments, and before he spoke the tears started from his eyes. He at length dimissed Tom with a gentle rebuke, advising him for the future to apply to him in cases of distress, rather than to use extraordinary means of relieving them himself.

This affair was afterwards the subject of much debate between Thwackum and Square. Thwackum held, that this was flying in Mr. Allworthy's face, who had intended to punish the fellow for his disobedience. He said, in some instances, what the wold called charity appeared to him to be opposing the will of the Almighty, which had marked some particular persons for destruction; and that this was, in like manner, acting in opposition to Mr. Allworthy; concluding, as usual, with a hearty recommendation of birch.

Square argued strongly on the other side, in opposition perhaps to Thwackum, or in compliance with Mr Allworthy, who seemed very much to approve what Jones had done. As to what he urged on this occasion, as I am convinced most of my readers will be much abler advocates for poor Jones, it would be impertinent to relate it. Indeed it was not difficult to reconcile to the rule of right an action which it would have been impossible to deduce from the rule of wrong.

Soon after this, an action was brought against the gamekeeper by Squire Western (the gentleman in whose manor the partridge was killed), for depredations of the like kind. This was a most unfortunate circumstance for the fellow, as it not only of itself threatened his ruin, but actually prevented Mr. Allworthy from restoring him to his favour: for as that gentleman was walking out one evening with Mr. Blifil and young Jones, the latter slily drew him to the habitation of Black George; where the family of that poor wretch, namely, his wife and children, were found in all the misery with which cold, hunger and nakedness, can affect human creatures: for as to the money they had received from Jones, former debts had consumed almost the whole.

Such a scene as this could not fail of affecting the heart of Mr. Allworthy. He immediately gave the mother a couple of guineas, with which he bid her cloath her children. The poor woman burst into tears at this goodness, and while she was thanking him, could not refrain from expressing her gratitude to Tom, who had, she said, long preserved both her and hers from starving. "We have not," says she, "had "a morsel to eat, nor have these poor children had a rag to "put on, but what his goodness had bestowed on us." For, indeed, besides the horse and Bible, Tom had sacrificed a nightgown and other things to the use of this distressed family.

On

On their return home Tom made uſe of all his eloquence to diſplay the wretchedneſs of theſe people, and the penitence of Black George himſelf; and in this he ſucceeded ſo well, that Mr. Allworthy ſaid, He thought the man had ſuffered enough for what was paſt; that he would forgive him, and think of ſome means of providing for him and his family.

Jones was ſo delighted with his news, that tho' it was dark when they returned home, he could not help going back a mile, in a ſhower of rain, to acquaint the poor woman with the glad tidings; but, like other haſty divulgers of news, he only brought on himſelf the trouble of contradicting it: for the ill fortune of Black George made uſe of the very opportunity of his friend's abſence to overturn all again.

Mr. Blifil fell very ſhort of his companion in the aimable quality of mercy; but he as greatly exceeded him in one of a much higher kind, namely, in juſtice: in which he followed both the precepts and examples of Thwackum and Square; for though they would both make frequent uſe of the word Mercy, yet it was plain, that, in reality, Square held it to be inconſiſtent with the rule of right; and Thwackum was for doing juſtice, and leaving mercy to Heaven. The two gentlemen did indeed ſomewhat differ in opinion concerning the objects of this ſublime virtue; by which Thwackum would probably have deſtroyed one half of mankind, and Square the other half.

Mr. Blifil, then, though he had kept ſilence in the preſence of Jones, yet when he had better conſidered the matter, could by no means endure the thoughts of ſuffering his uncle to confer favours on the undeſerving. He therefore reſolved immediately to acquaint him with the fact which we have above ſlightly hinted to the readers; the truth of which was as follows:

The gamkeeper; about a year after he was diſmiſſed from Mr. Allworthey's ſervice, and before Tom's ſelling the horſe, being in want of bread, either to fill his own mouth, or thoſe of his family, as he paſſed through a field belonging ro Mr. Weſtern, eſpied a hare ſitting in her form: this hare he had baſely and barbarouſly knocked on the head, againſt the laws of ſportſmen.

The higler, to whom the hare was ſold, being unfortunately taken many months after with a quantity of game upon him, was obliged to make his peace withe the Squire, by becoming evidence againſt ſome poacher. And now Black George was pitched upon by him, as being a perſon already obnoxious to Mr. Weſtern, and one of no good fame in the country. He was, beſides, the beſt ſacrifice the higler could make, as he had ſupplied him with no game ſince; and, by this means, the witneſs had an opportuinity of ſcreening his better cuſtomers; for the Squire, being charmed with de power of puniſhing Black George, whom a ſingle tranſgreſſion was ſufficient to ruin, made no further enquiry.

Had this fact been truly laid before Mr. Allworthy, it might probably have done the gamekeeper very little miſchief; but there is no zeal blinder than that which is inſpired with the love of juſtice againſt offenders. Mr. Bliſil had forgot the diſtance of the time. He varied likewiſe in the manner of the fact: and, by the haſty addition of the ſingle letter S, he conſiderably altered the ſtory; for he ſaid that George had wired hares. Theſe alterations might probably have been ſet right, had not Mr. Bliſil unluckily inſiſted on a promiſe of ſecrecy from Mr. Allworthy, before he revealed the matter to him; but, by that means, the poor gamekeeper was condemned, without having any opportuinity to defend himſelf; for as the fact of killing the hare, and of the action brought, were certainly true, Mr. Allworthy had no doubt concerning the reſt.

Short-lived then was the joy of theſe poor people; for Mr. Allworthy, the next morning, declared he had freſh reaſon, without aſſigning it, for his anger, and ſtrictly forbade Tom to mention George any more; though, as for his family, he ſaid, he would endeavour to keep them from ſtarving; but as to the fellow himſelf, he would leave him to the laws, which nothing could keep him from breaking.

Tom could by no means divine, what had incenſed Mr. Allworthy; for of Mr. Bliſil he had not the leaſt ſuſpicion. However, as his friendſhip was to be tired out by no diſappointments, he now determined to try another method of preſerving the poor gamekeeper from ruin.

Jones was lately grown very intimate with Mr. Weſtern. He had ſo greately recommended himſelf to that gentleman, by leaping over five-barred gates, and by other acts of ſportſmanſhip, that the Squire had declared Tom would certainly make a great man, if he had but ſufficient encouragement. He often wiſhed he had himſelf a ſon with ſuch parts;

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0248
DFG

parts; and one day very solemnly asserted at a drinking bout, that Tom should hunt a pack of hounds for a thousand pounds of his money, with any huntsman in the whole country.

By such kind of talents he had so ingratiated himself with the Squire, that he was a most welcome guest at his table, and a favourite companion in his sport: every thing which the Squire held most dear, to wit, his guns, dogs, and horses, were now as much at the command of Jones, as if they had been his own. He resolved, therefore, to make use of this favour on behalf of his friend Black George whom, he hoped to introduce into Mr. Western's family, in the same capacity in which he had before served Mr. Allworthy.

The reader, if he considers that this fellow was already obnoxious to Mr. Western, and if he considers farther the weighty business by which that gentleman's displeasure had been incurred, will, perhaps, condemn this as a foolish and desperate undertaking; but if he should totally condemn young Jones on that account, he will greatly applaud him for strengthening himself with all imaginable interest on so arduous on occasion.

For this purpose, then, Tom applied to Mr. Western's daughter, a young lady of about seventeen years of age, whom her father, next after those necessary implements of sport just before mentioned, loved and esteemed above all the world. Now, as she had some influence on the Squire, so Tom had some little influence on her. But this being the intended heroine of this work, a lady whit whom we ourselves are greatly in love, and with whom many of our readers will, probably, be in love too before we part, it is by no means proper she should make her appearance in the end of a book.

Book IV. Chap. III.

Wherein the history goes back to commemorate a trifling incident that happened some years since; but which, trifling as it was, had some future consequences.

The amiable Sophia was now in her eigtheenth year, when she is introduced into this history. Her father, as hath been said, was fonder of her than of any other human creature. To her, therefore, Tom Jones applied, in order to engage her interest on the behalf of his friend the gamekeeper.

But before we proceed to this business, a short recapitulation of some previous matters may be necessary.

Though the different tempers of Mr. Allworthy and of Mr. Weſtern did not admit of a very intimate correſpondence, yet they lived upon what is called a decent footing together; by which means the young people of both families had been acquainted from their infancy; and as they were all near of the ſame age, had been frequent play-mates together.

The gaiety of Tom's temper ſuited better with Sophia than the grave and ſober diſpoſition of Mr. Blifil. And the preference which ſhe gave the former of theſe would often appear ſo plainly, that a lad of a more paſſionate turn than Mr. Blifil was, might have ſhewn ſome diſpleaſure at it.

As he did not, however, outwardly expreſs any ſuch diſguſt, it would be an ill office in us to pay a viſit to the inmoſt receſſes of his mind, as ſome ſcandalous people ſearch into the moſt ſecret affairs of their friends, and often pry into their cloſets and cupboards, only to diſcover their poverty and meanneſs to the world.

However, as perſons who ſuſpect they have given others cauſe of offence, are apt to conclude they are offended; ſo Sophia imputed an action of Mr. Blifil to his anger, which the ſuperior ſagacity of Thwackum and Square diſcerned to have ariſen from a much better principle.

Tom Jones, when very young, had preſented Sophia with a little bird, which he had taken from the neſt, had nurſed up, and taught to ſing.

Of this bird, Sophia, then about thirteen years old, was ſo extremely fond, that her chief buſineſs was to feed and tend it, and her chief pleaſure to play with it. By theſe means little Tommy, for ſo the bird was called, was become ſo tame, that it would feed out of the hand of its miſtreſs, would perch upon her finger, and ly contented in her boſom, where it ſeemed almoſt ſenſible of its own happineſs; though ſhe always kept a ſmall ſtring obout its leg, nor would ever truſt it with the liberty of flying away.

One day, when Mr. Allworthy and his whole family dined at Mr. Weſtern's, Mr. Blifil, being in the garden with little Sophia, and obſerving the extreme fondneſs that ſhe ſhewed for her little bird, deſired her to truſt it for a moment in his hands. Sophia preſently complied with the young gentleman's requeſt, and after ſome previous caution, delivered him her bird; of which he was noo ſooner in poſſeſſion, than he ſlipt the ſtring from its leg, and toſſed it into the air.

The

The fooliſh animal no ſooner preceived itſelf at liberty, than forgetting all the favours it had received from Sophia, it flew directly from her, and perched on a bough at ſome diſtance.

Sophia, ſeeing her bird gone, ſcreamed out ſo loud, that Tom Jones, who was at a little diſtance, immediately ran to her aſſiſtance.

He was no ſooner informed of what had happened, than he curſed Blifil for a pitiful, malicious raſcal; and then immediately ſtripping of his coat, he applied himſelf to climbing the tree to which the bird eſcaped.

Tom had almoſt recovered his little nameſake, when the branch on which it was perched, and that hung over a canal, broke, and the poor lad plumped over head and ears into the water.

Sophia's concern now changed its object. And as ſhe apprehended the boy's life was in danger, ſhe ſcreamed ten times louder than before; and indeed Mr. Blifil himſelf now ſeconded her with all the vociferation in his power.

The company, wo were ſitting in a room next the garden, were inſtantly alarmed, and came all forth; but juſt as they reached the canal, Tom (for the water was luckily pretty ſhallow in that part) arrived ſafely on ſhore.

Thwackum fell violently on poor Tom, who ſtood droping and ſhivering before him, when Mr. Allworthy deſired him to have patience, and turning to Mr. Blifil, ſaid, Pray, child, what is the reaſon of all this diſturbance?

Mr. Blifil anſwered, "Indeed, uncle, I am very ſorry for "what I have done; I have been unhappily the occaſion of it "all. I had Miſs Sophia's bird in my hand, and thinking the "poor creature languiſhed for liberty, I own I could not "forbear giving it what it deſired; for I allways thought there "was ſomething very cruel in confining any thing. It ſeemed "to be againſt the law of nature, by which every thing hath "a right to liberty; nay, it is even unchriſtian; for it is "not doing what we would be done by. But if I had imagined "Miſs Sophia would have been ſo much concerned at it, I "am ſure I would never have done it; nay, if I had known "what would have happened to the bird itſelf: for when Mr. "Jones, who climbed up that tree after it, fell into the "water, the bird took a ſecond flight, and preſently a naſty "hawk carried it away."

Poor

Poor Sophia, who now first heard of her little Tommy's fate, (for her concern for Jones had prevented her perceiving it when it happened), shed a shower of tears. These Mr. Allworthy endeavoured to assuage, promising her a much finer bird: bud she declared she would never have another. Her father chid her for crying so for a foolish bird; but could not help telling young Blifil, if he was a son of his, his backside should be well flea'd.

Sophia now returned to her chamber, the two young gentlemen were sent home, and the rest of the company returned to their bottle; where a conversation ensued on the subject of the bird, so curious, that we think it deserves a chapter by itself.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE PRESENT STATE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY. *)

The Company's affairs, until about the year 1750, required little more than commercial talents; the produce of our own country was carried there, sold, and returned in the manufactures of those parts; and the little spots we possessed excited no jealousies amongst the neighbouring princes.

The French, under Dupleix, first opened the way to acquiring territorial possessions in India; and why they did not reap those advantages we have since done, and which they may be justly charged with having forced us into, on that coast, arose entirely from the misconduct of Dupleix, who, intoxicated by pride and vanity, did, through his obstinacy, plunge his countrymen into various distresses, until they were quite undone. The success, which at first attended his measures, was owing in a great degree to our inactivity and wretched parsimony. Mr. Barnet, who had foreseen the storm that was gathering, died unfortunately at the beginning of 1746, and Madrass was taken the latter end of that year.

The leaders in the direction at that time, attentive only to the commercial plan, and prejudiced against more extensive views, remained inactive until the French and Indian powers together had almost drove us into the sea. We were roused at last by necessity; and, about the year 1751, the Company's affairs affairs began to wear a better aſpect: lord Clive had made a ſtand againſt the enemy: and ſoon after general Laurence returned again from Europe to take upon him the chief command; his lordſhip acted under the general, and aſſiſted him in eſtabliſhing the reputation of the Britiſh arms.

*) Land. 1771. gr. 8.

About the year 1755, we were almoſt extirpated at Bengal, by the diſputes between Drake and Surajah Dowla, but were fortunately re-eſtabliſhed by lord Clive and admiral Watſon. Lord Clive went farther; he placed us on a footing all Europeans had been ſtrangers to before; for, by virtue of his treaties and conqueſts, we took the lead at the Suba's court. Soon after all this was ſettled, lord Clive returned to England, haſtened in ſome meaſure by a peremptory letter from the directors.

This increaſe of riches and power, joined to the intercourſe we had with the natives, both at Bengal and in the Carnatic, enabled us to obtain a more immediate, and a fuller knowledge of the country, its wealth and natural advantages, the number of its inhabitants, their manners, cuſtoms, and religions; and to preſerve our revenues, we found it neceſſary, that nothing material ſhould be done by the princes near us, without our approbation.

An extenſive commerce is the great and capital advantage which England ought to expect from theſe acquiſitions; and conſequently the politics of India ſhould be principally directed to this end; but though, perhaps, it might be wiſhed, that the original plan of trade, upon which the Company was firſt conſtituted, had ſtill continued upon that contracted bottom, and that they had not been from merchants erected into ſovereign princes; yet, as this great dominion is acquired, it muſt be maintained; for the politics, not only of Aſia, but even of Europe, are now ſo interwoven with the affairs of our commerce there, that it will be abſolutely impoſſible to return back to our former ſituation with any hopes of profit, or indeed of ſecurity: we muſt preſerve what we have acquired upon the principles of ſelf-defence.

The great endeavour of all commercial ſtates, is to draw the productions of other countries to its own center; to work up the raw, and to re-export the manufactured goods; for wherever goods, though manufactured abroad, can be carried out again for ſale, ſo as to produce a final balance in favour of the ſtate, they are in a degree as meritorious, in the eye of trade, as if they were manufactured at home: but, in a public light, light, the advantages that flow from a monopoly of carriage are far ſuperior to the dry profit of the merchant; to wit, the encreaſe of ſailors and ſhipping, and the employment of multitudes; all which add ſtrength as well as riches to the community. The act of navigation was founded upon this principle, by which this kingdom is become the greateſt maritime power that ever exiſted.

A fair opportunity now ſeems to offer, that may enable this kingdom, in a few years, to center in itſelf almoſt all the trade to the Eaſt-Indies, and thereby to ſupply the reſt of Europe from the mart of London. To effect ſo great an undertaking, a revenue muſt be allotted, ſufficient to maintain a ſtrong ſquadron in India always ready to fit out, an three ſeparate armies, one on the eaſt and one on the weſt coaſt of the peninſula, and one at Bengal. It is by ſuch ſteps only, that the conqueſts can become of any laſting or ſolid avantage; and that all this may be effected; I ſhall endeavour to ſhew: happy, if any of my hints may excite ſome abler head to digeſt, and bring them to perfection.

Lord Clive, when he returned home in February, 1760, left Mr. Holwel in the chair at Bengal, who was ſuperſeded from Madraſs, in Auguſt following, by Mr. Vanſittart, a gentleman of a fair and amiable character, but unacquainted with that ſettlement. Immediately on his arrival, the conduct of Meer Jaffier was placed in ſuch a light, as induced him, by a fatal revolution, to place Coſſim Cawn on the throne. The ſtain of wanton tyranny this action left behind it, will long remain upon the minds of the natives: the whole of this blameable tranſaction, together with the many melancholy conſequences, are to well known to need repeating: matters ſoon came to a criſis; one conſtant ſcene of anarchy and diſſenſion prevailed from Coſſim's aſcending the throne to his flight: he fled at laſt, and carried with him a vaſt ſum in ſpecie.

The principal reaſon given to the public for depoſing Meer Jaffier, was the wretched ſtate of his finances; but this aroſe from the miſconduct and treachery of his miniſters. That there was no real want of ſpecie in the country, is manifeſt from the large ſums which Coſſim was enabled to collect, with ſuch expedition, almoſt immediately after his advancement: and with how much eaſe might the Company have reformed his government, by a change of his miniſters, if they had pleaſed, without any diſturbance or commotion

I am clearly of opinion it was as eaſy to reſtrain Meer Jaffier as to depoſe him; and the country would not, in that caſe, (to ſay nothing of the other miſchiefs occaſioned by that revolution) have been drained of that immenſe ſum which Coſſim carried off with him upon his expulſion: yet the country was not totally exhauſted even by this drain, witneſs the ſums that have been ſent out, ſince his flight, to Madraſs, Bombay, and China.

In the year 1764, Meer Jaffier was replaced in the ſubaſhip; conteſts, and the purſuit of private gain, continued abroad, and party ran high at home. It was at this time lord Clive again ſtood forth to take upon him the command at Bengal. He ſet off in May, 1764, and did not reach Calcutta until April, 1764. He found Meer Jaffier dead, when he arrived; he gave that Nabob's ſon the outward pageantry of Suba, but the power and the revenues he took charge of for the company; he allotted out of them a certain ſtipend for the nominal Suba, and for the Mogul, the tribute theſe provinces uſed to remit to Delhi, when the empire was properly ſettled; the remainder of the revenues was brought into the treaſury of Calcutta. *)

The ſubaſhip of Bengal takes in a large extent of country, the greateſt part of which is under the Suba's immediate direction; the remainder is under the management of Nabobs, Rajahs, or Polygars, who are to pay certain annual tributes to the Suba, and ſome of them are likewiſe to bring into the field a certain number of troops whenever they are required, the management of the lands within their reſpective governments being left entirely to themſelves to farm and to collect. The diſtracted ſtate the empire had long been in, had led the Suba to neglect paying the tribute due to the throne of Delhi; and the enfeebled ſtate of Shaw Allum made him incapable of enforcing his right; but ſince we have had poſſeſſion, that uſual tribute has been regularly paid.

The whole revenue above mentioned, including the tribute payable to the Great Mogul, amounts to the ſum of near three milions four hundred thouſand pounds; to which may be added the duties collected on the foreign trade at the port of

*) When lord Clive arrived the ſecond time, and took the revenues from the Suba, his lordſhip, together with his council, formed the extenſive trade carried on throughout the provinces for ſalt, beetel, and tobacco, into a monopoly, under the management of a company, equally ſhutting out both natives and foreigners.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0255
DFG

of Calcutta, about twenty thousand pounds. Besides all this, the Company are in the receipts of a considerable sum for the duties upon salt, beetel and tobacco. This brought in, while the monopoly of those articles took place, about one hundred and twenty thousand pounds a year, but, since that was abolished, is reduced to one hundred thousand pounds, or under. The whole of this revenue may be fairly set at three millions five hundred thousand pounds, out of which the *) tribute to the Mogul, the allotment to the Nabob, the expence of collecting the revenue, and the civil and military charges of government at Bengal, altogether amount to about two millions, though I am pretty sure it is not quite so much, and consequently there ought to remain the sum of one million five hundred thousand pounds, neat income, in the hands of the Company, to be applied for the purchase of the home investments, or for any emergencies that might accidentally arise. The province of Orixa, which poperly belongs to the Suba of Bengal, is now in the hands of Morattahs: it yields a revenue of about one hundred and thirty thousand pounds. This province might be easily recovered; and it is well defended by hills that bound it to the S. W.

The present establishment of the forces at Bengal is fixed at three thousand Europeans, and near ) twenty thousand Seipoys or country infantry; all of whom are regularly disciplined, and formed into battalions, and are commanded by European Officers; this force is reckoned sufficient to defend the provinces against all invasions.

) The prince is the lord proprietor of the lands, his will is under no controul; nevertheless, the mode of farming out the lands continues amongst the Morattahs, and all the Gentoos, in much the same state it was in before the Moors got possession of the empire.

The

	£.
*) The tribute to the Mogul, — — —	330,000
The Nabob, for his court, 18 lacks, charge of collecting the revenue, 35 lack,	670,000
The civil and military expences, with the amount of stores of different kinds, about —	1,000,000
	2,000,000

) This number does not include the Seipoys employed by the revenue officers.

) Princes holding large tracts of country, have other princes under them, in like manner as they hold under the Mogul.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0256
DFG

The lands are under the direction either of officers superintending for the Mogul, or princes who, collecting for themselves, pay annual tributes to the empire; and no lands are exempted from paying a proportion to the crown, but those belonging to pagodas, mosques, or enjoying some other privileges. These lands amongst the Morattahs, are granted to the occupiers for a term of years, or for life, which last method mostly prevails; and provided no charge lays against them for embezzlement, or neglect of tillage, there is scarcely an instance of the lands being taken from the families of the first occupiers. The same maxims prevail with respect to the Rajahs and great officers, who were always permitted to hold by descent, and were scarce ever displaced, except for misgovernment or rebellion. *) The lands pay according to their produce; this is taken by collectors for the prince, who calling in men conversant in husbandry, do, by their judgment, set the value of the prince's share while the crop is on the ground; the value, so settled, is what the occupier is to pay, and this is transmitted, by the several collectors, to the treasurer or Duan, who is commonly the first minister of the prince. The grain usually pays one half of its produce, cocoa-nut and beetel-nut trees two-thirds, fruit trees, and those converted into wood and timber one-third; buffaloes pay one rupee each (or half-a-crown), draft oxen not so much, a-year; and so every other article in proportion, that is produced by, or nourished from the earth.

The prince's revenue is neat and clear of all deduction, except the fees to the Duan, for himself and his collectors, which are fixed, and publickly known; what remains over and above the produce due to the prince, belongs to the occupier of the lands; and this is found, by experience, when he is permitted to enjoy it, to be an ample reward to him for his labour and expence.

*) Most of the lands in the southern parts of the empire yield double crops.

DESCRIPTION OF ADRIANOPLE AND CONSTANTINOPLE. *)

To the Abbot of — .

Adrianople, May 17, O. S. 1718.

I am going to leave Adrianople, and I would not do it, without giving you some account of all that is curious in it, which I have taken a great deal of pains to see It is called from the Emperor Adrian, and was the first European seat of the Turkish Empire, and has been the favourite residence of many Sultans. Mahomet the fourth, and Mustapha, the brother of the reigning Emperor, were so fond of it, that they wholly abandoned Constantinople, which humour so far exasperated the Janizaries, that it was a considerable motive to the rebellions that deposed them. Yet this man seems to love to keep his court here. I can give you no reason for this partiality. 'Tis true, the situation is fine, and the country all round very beautiful; but the air is extremely bad, and the Seraglio itself is not free from the ill effect of it. The town is said to be eight miles in compass; I suppose they reckon in the gardens. There are some good houses in it, I mean large ones; for the architecture of their palaces never makes any great shew. It is now very full of people; but they are most of them such as follow the court, or camp, and when they are removed, I am told 'tis no populous city. The river Maritza on which it is situated, is dried up every summer, which contributes very much to make it unwholesome. It is now a very pleasant stream. There are two noble bridges built over it. I had the curiosity to go to see the Exchange in my Turkish dress, which is disguise sufficient. Yet I own, I was not very easy when I saw it crowded with Janizaries; but they dare not be rude to a woman, and made way for me with as much respect, as if I had been in my own figure. It is half a mile in length, the roof arched, and kept extremely neat. It holds three hundred and sixty-five shops, furnished with all sorts of rich goods exposed to sale in the same manner as at the New Exchange in London; but the pavement is kept much neater, and the shops are all so clean, they seem just new painted. — Idle people *) Lettres of the Right Honourable Lady Mary Worthley Montague written, during her Travels in Europe, Asia and Africa. Lond. 1769. 3 Vol. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0258
DFG

people of all sorts walk here for their diversion, or amuse themselves with drinking coffee, or sherbet, which is cried about as oranges and sweat-meats are in our playhouses. I observed most of the rich tradesmen were Jews. That people are in incredible power in this country. They have many privileges above all the natural Turks themselves, and have formed a very considerable commonwealth here, being judged by their own laws. They have drawn the whole trade of the Empire into their hands, partly by the firm union amongst themselves, and partly by the idle temper and want of industry in the Turks. Every Bassa has his Jew, who is his "homme d'affaires;" he is let into all his secrets, and does all his business. No bargain is made, no bribe received, no merchandise disposed of, but what passes through their hands. They are the physicians, the stewards, and the interpreters of all the great men. You may judge how advantageous this is to a people who never fail to make use of the smallest advantages. They have found the secret of making themselves so necessary, that they are certain of the protection of the court, whatever ministry is in power. Even the English, French and Italian merchants, who are sensible of their artifices, are, however, forced to trust their affairs to their negotiation, nothing of trade being managed without them, and the meanest amongst them being too important to be disobliged, since the whole body take care of his interests with as much vigour as they would those of the most considerable of their members. They are many of them vastly rich, but they take care to make little public shew of it; though they live in their houses in the utmost luxury and magnificence. This copious subject has drawn me from my description of the exchange, founded by Ali Bassa, whose name it bears. Near it is the Sherski, a street of a mile in length, full of shops of all kind of fine merchandize, but excessive dear, nothing being made here. It is covered on the top with boards to keep out the rain, that merchants may meet conveniently in all weathers. The Besisten near it, is another exchange, built upon pillars, where all sorts of horse furniture are sold. Glittering every where with gold, rich embroidery and jewels, it makes a very agreeable shew. From this place I went, in my Turkish coach, to the camp, which is to move in a few days to the frontiers. The Sultan is already gone to his tents, and all his court; the appearance of them is indeed, very magnificent. Those of the great men are rather like palaces than tents, taking up a great compaſs of ground, and being divided into a vaſt number of apartments. They are all of green, and the Baſſas of three Tails, have thoſe enſigns of their power placed in a very conſpicuous manner before their tents, which are adorned, on the top with gilded balls, more or leſs, according to their different ranks. The ladies go in coaches to ſee the camp, as eagerly as ours did to that of Hide Park; but 'tis very eaſy to obſerve, that the ſoldiers do not begin the campaign with any great chearfulneſs. The war is a general grievance upon the people, but particularly hard upon the tradeſmen, now that the Grand Signior is reſolved to lead his army in perſon. Every company of them is obliged, upon this occaſion, to make a preſent according to their ability.

I took the pains of riſing at ſix in the morning to ſee the ceremony, which did not however begin till eight. The Grand Signior was at the Seraglio window, to ſee the proceſſion, which paſſed through the principal ſtreets. It was preceded by an Effendi, mounted on a camel, richly furniſhed, reading aloud the Alcoran, finely bound, laid upon a cuſhion. He was ſurrounded by a parcel of boys, in white, ſinging ſome verſes of it, followed by a man dreſſed in green boughs, repreſenting a clean huſbandman ſowing ſeed. After him ſeveral reapers with garlands of ears of corn, as Ceres is pictured, with ſcythes in their hands ſeeming to mow. Then a little machine drawn by oxen, in which was as wind mill, and boys employed in grinding corn, followed by another machine, drawn by buffalos carrying an oven, and two more boys, one employed kneading the bread, and another in drawing it out of the oven. Theſe boys threw little cakes on both ſides amongſt the crowd, and were followed by the whole company of bakers marching on foot, two by two, in their beſt cloaths, with cakes, loaves, paſties and pies of all ſorts on their heads, and after them two buffoons or jack-puddings, with their faces end cloaths ſmeared with meal, who diverted the mob with their antic geſtures. In the ſame manner followed all the companies of trade in the Empire; the nobler ſort, ſuch as jewellers, mercers &c. finely mounted and many of the pageants that repreſent their trades perfectly magnificent; amongſt which that of the Furriers made one of the beſt figures, being a very large machine ſet round with the ſkins of ermins, foxes, &c. ſo well ſtuffed, that the animals ſeemed to be alive, and followed by muſic and dancers. I believe they were, upon the whole, twenty thouſand men, all ready to follow his Highneſs if he commanded them. The rear was cloſed by the volunteers, who came to beg the honour of dying in his ſervice. This part of the ſhew ſeemed to me ſo barbarous, that I removed from the window upon the firſt appearance of it. They were all naked to the middle. Some had their arms pierced through with arrows left ſticking in them. Others had them ſticking in their heads, the blood trickling down their faces. Some flaſhed their arms with ſharp knives, making the blood ſpring out upon thoſe that ſtood there; and this is looked upon as an expreſſion of their zeal for glory. I am told, that ſome make uſe of it to advance their love; and when they are near the window, where their miſtreſs ſtands (all the women in town being veiled to ſee this ſpectacle) they ſtick another arrow for her ſake, who gives ſome ſign of approbation and encouragement to this gallantry. The whole ſhew laſted for near eight hours, to my great ſorrow, who was heartily tired, though I was in the houſe of the widow of the Captain Baſſa (Admiral) who refreſhed me with coffee, ſweatmeats, ſherbet, &c. with all poſſible civility.

thouſand

I tell you nothing of the order of Mr. Worthley's entry, and his audience. Theſe things are allways the ſame, and have been ſo often deſcribed, I won't trouble you with the repetition. The young Prince, about eleven years old, ſits near his father when he gives audience; he is a handſome boy, but, probably, will not immediately ſucceed the Sultan, there being two ſons of Sultan Muſtapha (his eldeſt brother) remaining; the eldeſt about twenty years old, on whom the hopes of the people are fixed. This reign has been bloody and avaritious. I am apt to believe they are very impatient to ſee the end of it. I am, Sir

Yours &c. &c.

To the Counteſs of B—.

At length I have heard from my dear lady B——, for the firſt time. I am perſuaded you have had the goodneſs to write before, but I have had the ill fortune to loſe your letters. Since my laſt I have ſtaid quietly at Conſtantinople, a city that I ought in conſcience to give your ladyſhip a right notion of, ſince I know you can have none but what is partial and miſtaken from the writings of travellers. 'Tis certain, there are many people that pass years here in Pera, without having ever seen it, and yet they all pretend to describe it. Pera, Tophana, and Galata, wholly inhabited by French Christians (and which, together, make the appearance of a very fine town) are divided from it by the sea, which is not above half so broad as the broadest part of the Thames; but the Christian men are loath to hazard the adventures they sometimes meet with amongst the Levents or Seamen (worse monsters than our watermen) and the women must cover their faces to go there, which they have a perfect aversion to do. 'Tis true, they wear veils in Pera, but they are such as only serve to shew their beauty to more advantage, and would not be permitted in Constantinople. These reasons deter almost every creature from seeing it; and the French Ambassadress will return to France (I believe) without ever having been there. You'll wonder, Madam, to hear me add, that I have been there very often. The Asmack, or Turkish veil, is become not only very easy, but agreeable to me; and if it was not, I would be content to endure some inconveniency to gratify a passion that is become so powerful with me, as curiosity. And indeed, the pleasure of going in a barge to Chelsea, is not comparable to that of rowing upon the canal of the sea here, where for twenty miles together down the Bosphorus, the most beautiful variety of prospects present themselves. The Asian side is covered with fruit trees, villages, and the most delightful landskips in nature; on the European, stands Constantinople, situated on seven hills. — The unequal heights make it seem as large again as it is (tho' one of the largest cities in the world) shewing an agreeable mixture of gardens, pine and cypress trees, palaces, mosques, and publick buildings, raised one above another, with as much beauty and appearance of symmetry as your ladyship ever saw in a cabinet adorned by the most skilful hands, where jars shew themselves above jars, mixed with canisters, babies and candlesticks. This is a very odd comparison; but it gives me an exact idea of the thing. I have taken care to see as much of the Seraglio as is to be seen. It is on a point of land running into the sea; a palace of prodigious extent, but very irregular. The gardens take in a large compass of ground, full of high cypress trees, which is all I know of them. The buildings are all of white stone, headed on top, with gilded turrets and spires, which look very magnificent; and indeed, I believe there is no Christian King's palace half so large.

There

There are six large courts in it, all built round and set with trees, having galleries of stone; one of those for the guard, another for the slaves, another for the officers of the kitchen, another for the stables, the fifth for the Divan, and the sixth for the apartment destined for audiences. On the ladies side there are, at least, as many more, with distinct courts belonging to their eunuchs and attendants, their kitchens, &c.

The next remarkable structure is that of St. Sophia, which 'tis very difficult to see. I was forced to send three times to the Caimaikan, (the governor of the town) and he assembled the chief Effendis, or heads of the law, and inquired of the Mufti, whether it was lawful to permit it. They passed some days in this important debate; but, I insisting on my request, permission was granted. I can't be informed why the Turks are more delicate on the subject of this mosque, than on any of the others, where, what Chirstian pleases may enter without scruple. I fancy they imagine that, having been once consecraced, people, on pretence of curiosity, might prophane it with prayers, particularly to those Saints, who are still very visible in Mosaic work, and no other way defaced but by the decays of time; for it is absolutely false, tho' so universally asserted, that the Turks defaced all the images that they found in the city.

The mosque of Sultan Solyman is an exact square, with four fine towers in the angles; in the midst is a noble Cupola supported with beautiful marble pillars; two lesser at the ends, supported in the same manner; the pavement and gallery round the Mosque, of marble; under the great cupola is a fountain adorned with such fine coloured pillars, that I can hardly think them natural marble; on one side is the pulpit of white marble, and on the other the little gallery for the Grand Signior. A fine stair-case leads to it, and it is built up with gilded lattices. At the upper-end is a sort of altar, where the name of God is written; and, before it, stand two candlesticks, as high as a man, with wax candles as thick as three flambeaux. The pavement is spread with fine carpets, and the Mosque illuminated with a vast number of lamps. The court leading to it is very spacious, with galleries of marble of green columns, covered with twenty-eight leaded cupolas on two sides, and a fine fountain of basons in the midst of it.

This description may serve for all the Mosques in Constantinople. The model is exactly the same, and they only differ in largeness and thickness of materials.

The Exchanges are all noble buildings, full of fine alleys, the greatest part supported with piliars, and kept wonderfully neat. Every trade has its distinct alley, where the merchandize is disposed in the same order as in the New Exchange at London. The Biststen, or jeweller's quarter, shews so much riches, such a vast quantity of diamonds, and all kind of precious stones, that they dazzle the sight. The embroiderers is also very glittering, and people walk here as much for diversion as business. The markets are most of them handsome squares, and admirably well provided, perhaps better than in any other part of the world.

I know you'll expect I should say something particular of the slaves; and you will imagine me half a Turk, when I don't speak of it with the same horror other Christians have done before me. But I cannot forbear applauding the humanity of the Turks to these creatures; they are never ill used, and their slavery is, in my opinion, no worse than servitude all over the world. 'Tis true they have no wages; but they give them yearly clothes to a higher value than our salaries to our ordinary servants.

I have seen no other footsteps of antiquity except the aqueducts, which are so vast that I am apt to believe they are yet more antient than the Greek Empire. The Turks, indeed, have clapped in some stones with Turkish inscriptions, to give their natives the honour of so great a work; but the deceit is easily discovered. — The other publick buildings are the Hans and Monasteries; the first are very large and numerous; the second few in number, and not at all magnificent. I had the curiosity to visit one of them, and to observe the devotions of the Dervises, which are as whimsical as any at Rome. These fellows have permission to marry, but are confined to an odd habit, which is only a piece of coarse white cloth, wrapped about them, with their legs and arms naked. Their order has few other rules, except that of performing their fantastick rites, every Tuesday and Friday, which is done in this manner: They meet together in a large hall, where they all stand with their eyes fixed on the ground and their arms across, while the Imaum or preacher reads part of the Alcoran from a pulpit, placed in the midst; and when he has done, eight or ten of them make make a melancholy concert with their pipes, which are no unmuſical inſtruments. Then he reads again, and makes a ſhort expoſition on what he has read; after which they ſing and play, till their Superior (the only one of them dreſſed in green) riſes and begins a ſort of ſolemn dance. They all ſtand about him in a regular figure, and while ſome play, the others tie their robe (which is very wide) faſt round their waiſt, and begin to turn round with an amazing ſwiftneſs, and yet with great regard to the muſic, moving ſlower or faſter as the tune is played. This laſts above an hour, without any of them ſhewing the leaſt appearance of giddineſs, which is not to be wondered at, when it is conſidered, they are all uſed to it from their infancy; moſt of them being devoted to this way of live from their birth. The turned amongſt them ſome little Derviſes of ſix or ſeven years old, who ſeemed no more diſordered by that exerciſe than the others. As the end of the ceremony they ſhout out; "There is no other God, "but God, and Mahomet his Prophet:" after which they kiſs the Superior's hand and retire. The whole is performed with the moſt ſolemn gravity. Nothing can be more auſtere than the form of theſe people; they never raiſe their eyes, and ſeem devoted to contemplation. And as ridiculous as this is in deſcription, there is ſomething touching in the air of ſubmiſſion and mortification they aſſume. — This letter is of a horrible length; but you may burn it when you have read enough, &c. &c.

THE CLIMATE, NATURAL HISTORY, AND PRODUCTS OF JAMAICA. *)

Jamaica lies between the 75th and 79th degrees of weſt longitude from Londou, and is between ſeventeen and nineteen degrees diſtant from the equinoctial. It is in length, from eaſt to weſt, upwards of one hundred and forty Engliſh miles, in breadth about ſixty, and of an oval form, divided by a ridge of rocky mountains, which give riſe to a vaſt number of fine rivulets, well ſtored with fiſh of various kinds, though they contain none of the European ſpecies, except eels and crawfish. The mullet is very palatable, and the colipever little inferior to salmon None of these rivers are navigable, or indeed could be made so without vast expence; yet some of these are so large, that canoes loaded with sugars, pass from very remote plantations to the sea-side. The soil, in general, is excellent, especially in the northern parts of the island, and prodigiously fertile.

*) Wynne's General Hiſtory of the Britiſh Empire in America, 2 Volls, London 1770. 8.

The longest day is little above thirteen hours, and the night proportionably long About nine in the forenoon the heat is intense, and could scarce be endured, was it not tempered by the sea-breeze, which generally begins to blow about that time, and continues till five in the afternoon. The nights are sometimes pretty cool; and every night there falls a piercing dew, which is extremely unwholesome. Twilight continues not above three quarters of an hour. The seasons are only distinguished by the denomination of wet and dry. On the whole, if the island was not subject to violent storms, hurricanes, and earthquakes, and if the air was not violently hot, damp, and extremely unwholesome in most parts, the fertility and beauty of the country, would make it as desirable a situation for pleasure as it is for profit. The south and north parts of the island are the most wholesome, agreeable, and least subject to hurricanes.

The natural products of this island are as numerous as perhaps those of any spot in the world of the same size. The tree which bears pimento, or all-spice, commonly called Jamaica pepper, rises to the height of above thirty feet, is streight, of a moderate thickness, and covered with a very smooth, shining, grey bark It shoots out a vast number of branches on every side, which bears a plentiful foliage of very large beautiful leaves, of a shining green, like those of the bay tree. The bunches of flowers are formed at the very ends of the twigs, each stalk bearing a flower that bends back, within which are to be discerned some stamina of a pale green colour; tho which succeed a bunch of berries, rather larger than juniper berries, like which, when ripe, they become black and smooth; but before they are quite ripe are picked off the tree, and dried in the sun This tree grows mostly upon the mountains. The island also produces the wild cinnamon tree, whose bark is so useful in medicine; the manchineal, which bears a most beautiful apple, and affords a most ornamental wood for cabinet-makers, though the apple and juice, in every part of the tree, are deadly poisons; the the mahogony tree; the cedar; the cabbage tree, about an hundred feet high, which bears a ſubſtance on the top which looks and taſtes like cabbage, and no leſs remarkable for the extreme hardneſs of its wood, which, when dry, is incorruptible, and ſcarcely penetrable by any tool; the palm, from which an oil is drawn, much eſteemed by the negroes: the white wood, which is never affected by the worm with which theſe ſeas abound; the ſoap-tree, whoſe berries anſwer all the purpoſes of waſhing; the mangrove and olive bark, uſeful to tanners; the ſuſtick red-wood; and, lately, the logwood, employed in dying; and the foreſts ſupply the druggiſts with guaicum, ſarſaparilla, chinaroot, caſſia, and tamarinds. The iſland alſo produces aloes, and the cochineal plant, though the Jamaicans are ignorant of the method of managing it. The maſtick-tree, iron-wood, and bulley-tree, are hard woods, fit for the millwright.

The iſland of Jamaica is divided into nineteen pariſhes, which ſend each two members to the aſſembly. Port Royal, the antient capital, ſtood upon the point of a peninſula, which formed a part of the ſhore of a noble harbour of the ſame name, in which a thouſand ſail of the largeſt ſhips may anchor, with the greateſt conveniency and ſafety; there being depth of water at the key of Port Royal for veſſels of the greateſt burthen to lie cloſe to the wharfs. This conveniency, and the reſort of the buccaneers, (though the ſoil is only a hot, dry ſand, which produces none of the neceſſaries of life not even freſh water) ſoon rendered it a very conſiderable place, in about thirty years time containing two thouſand houſes, which rented as high as in London. In ſhort, few places in the world could be compared to it for trade, wealth, and an entire corruption of manners. Port Royal continued in this flouriſhing ſtate until the 9th of June, 1692, when it was overwhelmed by an earthquake. It was rebuild, and a ſecond time deſtroyed by fire. The extraordinary conveniency of its harbour tempted the inhabitants to rebuild it once more; but, in 1722, an hurricane reduced it, a third time, to an heap of rubbiſh. Warned by theſe repeated calamities, the aſſembly removed the cuſtom-houſe, publick offices, and market from thence; and the principal inhabitants removed to the oppoſite ſide of the bay, to a town called Kingſton, now the ſeat of government, advantageouſly ſituated for freſh water, and all manner of accommodations. The ſtreets are of a commodious width, regularly drawn, and intercept each other at equal distances, and right angles. It contains upwards of a thousand houses, many of them handsomely built, tho' low, with porticos, and suitable conveniences for the climate. The harbour, by the care of governor Knowles, is now strongly fortified; its entrance being defended by Fort Charles, one of the strongest in the British islands, and a battery of sixty pieces of cannon, besides additional works. Kingston sends three members to the assembly.

at

St. Jago de la Vega, or Spanish Town, situated on the river Cobre, a considerable, though not navigable stream, that falls into the sea near Kingston, formerly the seat of government, and the place where the courts of justice were held, though inferior in size and resort to Kingston, and a town of less business, is equal in gaiety to many European cities, which it seems to rival in all polite diversions. This town sends three representatives to the assembly.

In St. Catherine's parish stands a fort, mounted with ten or twelve carriage guns, called Passage Fort, being the greatest thoroughfare in the island. Port Negril has a good safe harbour, and lies conveniently for intercepting the Spanish trade to and from the Havannah. Port Antonio, in St. Ann's parish, would be the best harbour in the island, were it not for its difficult entrance; however, it is defended by a regular fort, and a small garrison. There is likewise a fort at the bay of Port Morant, on the south-east port of the island, where are excellent plantations, both of sugar and cotton, and a salt work.

The government of Jamaica is the best in the gift of the crown, that of Ireland excepted. The standing salary is two thousand five hundred pounds per annum; the assembly vote the governor as much more; and this, with the great perquisites annexed to his office, make the whole near ten thousand pounds per annum.

The principal exports of the island are sugars, of which they export about twenty thousand hogsheads per annum, some of which weigh a ton. Most of this is sent to the mother-country, though a small part of it goes to North-America, in exchange for beef, pork, cheese, corn, pease, staves, plank, pitch, and tar. Rum, of which they export about four thousand puncheons, esteemed better than that of the other West-India Islands: molasses, in which they make the greatest part of their returns for New-England, where there are vast distilleries: cotton, of which they export two thousand bags.

Indigo

Indigo was formerly much cultivated; but the quantity now made is inconſiderable. Some cacao and coffee are alſo exported; but the latter is not much eſteemed. The Jamaicans alſo ſend to England a conſiderable quantity of pimento, ginger, drugs, ſweetmeats, and mahagony and manchineal plank.

The logwood-trade is alſo conſiderable. We formerly cut logwood in the Bay of Campeachy, on the northern ſide of the peninſula of Jucatan; but being expelled from thence by the Spaniards, the logwood-cutters ſettled upon the Gulph of Honduras, on the ſouthern ſide of the ſame peninſula, where they were protected by a fort, now demoliſhed, agreeable to an article of the late peace. Theſe logwood-cutters are moſtly fugitives from all parts of North-America, who live in a lawleſs manner, though they elect one of their number king, to whom they pay very little obedience. They amount in number to about five hundred, and go always well armed. The country they inhabit is extremely marſhy, the air prodigiouſly infeſted with muſketoes, and the water full of alligators; yet a life of licentiouſneſs and large gains, have perfectly reconciled them to the hardſhips of their employment, and the unwholeſomeneſs of the climate.

In the dry ſeaſon, when they cut logwood, they advance a conſiderable way into the country in ſearch of the logwood. In the wet ſeaſon, when the whole country is overflowed, they know the marks where the logwood lies, which being a heavy wood, ſinks in the water, but is ſo eaſily buoyed up, that a ſingle diver is capable of lifting very large pieces. The logwood is thus carried by the favour of the land-floods into the river, to the port where the ſhips lie that come upon this trade, which in ſome years employs near ſix thouſand tons of ſhipping, conſumes a large quantity of Engliſh manufactures, and is of conſiderable uſe in fabricating many others; the whole value of the returns being not leſs than ſixty thouſand pounds ſterling per annum. It is generally carried on by veſſels from North-America, which purchaſe their goods in Jamaica.

The trade which is carried on between Jamaica and the Spaniſh main is ſtill more profitable than that of the logwood, eſpecially in time of war. It is carried on in the following manner: The veſſel from Jamaica being furniſhed with negroes, and a proper aſſortment of other goods, proceeds to a place called Monkey Key, within four miles of Portobelo. On its arrival, a perſon underſtanding the Spaniſh tongue is immediately immediately ſent aſhore, to give notice to the merchants of that town. Information is likewiſe given, with all poſſible expedition, to the merchants of Panama. Without loſs of time, the traders ſet out, diſguiſed like peaſants, and carrying their ſilver in earthen jars, covered with flour, in order to deceive the officers of the revenue. They generally repair on board, where they are handſomely entertained, and at their departure take their purchaſes along with them, either negroe-ſlaves, or dry goods packed up in ſuch a manner as to be carried by one perſon, leaving behind them the price agreed on in dollars. They are likewiſe furniſhed with proviſions ſufficient to ſerve them during their return. This traffic commonly laſts for about five or ſix weeks. If the whole cargo is not diſpoſed of at this place, they ſhape their courſe then for an harbour called the Brew, about five miles diſtant from Carthagena, where they quickly find a vent for the reſt of their goods. Theſe are the two principal places where this trade is carried on, but they are not the only ones; the Caraccas, and many other parts upon that coaſt, have alſo their ſhare. Nor are the Engliſh the only nation concerned in it; the French from Hiſpaniola, and the Dutch from Curaſſow, likewiſe interfere, and have, within theſe few years, almoſt entirely cut out the Engliſh, owing chiefly to the injudicious regulations of a late miniſter. There was, however, when it flouriſhed, no trade more profitable than this; the payments being not only all in ready money, but the goods ſelling at an higher price than in any other market. But it is prohibited by the Spaniards, under ſevere penalties; and the guarda coſtas, when they catch any of theſe interlopers, treat them little better than if they were pirates. Beſides, they frequently ſeize, and otherwiſe maltreat, the fair traders, under pretence of their being concerned in this contraband traffick. This practice has given riſe to numberleſs diſputes between the courts of Great-Britain and Spain, and particularly was the occaſion of the firſt Spaniſh war.

This commerce at all times, and the prizes which in great numbers are carried into Jamaica in time of war, for of all our iſlands it is the beſt ſituated for making captures, occaſion a vaſt influx of treaſure into it; ſo that great fortunes are made as rapidly here as any where elſe in the world, whilſt the people appear to live in ſuch a ſtate of profuſion and luxury in their equipages, their cloaths, furniture, and tables, as in any other place would bring on beggary and bankruptcy.

On

On this account their treaſure makes but a very ſhort ſtay amongſt them, but is immediately tranſmitted to North-America, or Europe, to purchaſe the different articles of luxury and conveniency, as well as to ſupply their extraordinary demand for ſlaves, which is annually for above ſix thouſand head, both to ſupply their own deficiency and the Spaniſh market.

ACT. I. SCENE I and II.

OF Mr. COLMAN'S COMEDY OF THE JEALOUS WIFE.*)

Mrs. Oakly, within.

Don't tell me — I know it is ſo — It's monſtrous, and I will not bear it.

Oak. within. But, my Dear! —

Mrs. Oak. Nay, nay, &c.

(Squabbling within.

Enter Mrs. Oakly, with a Letter, Oakly following.

Mrs. Oak. Say what you will, Mr. Oakly, you ſhall never perſuade me, but this is ſome filthy Intrigue of yours.

Oak. I can aſſure you, my Love! —

Mrs. Oak. Your Love! — Don't I know your — Tell me, I ſay, this Inſtant, every Circumſtance relating to this Letter.

Oak. How can I tell you, when you will not ſo much as let me ſee it?

Mrs. Oak. Look you, Mr. Oakly, this Uſage is not to be borne. You take a Pleaſure in abuſing my Tenderneſs and ſoft Diſpoſition. — To be perpetually running over the whole Town, nay the whole Kingdom too, in purſuit of your Amours! — Did not I diſcover that you was great with Mademoiſelle, my own Woman? — Did not you contract a ſhameful Familiarity with Mrs. Freeman? — Did not I detect your Intrigue with Lady Wealthy? — Was not you —

Oak. Oons! Madam, the Grand Turk himſelf has not half ſo many Miſtreſſes — You throw me out of all Patience — Do I know any body but our common Friends? — Am I *) Oxford 1761. 8.

I visited by any body, that does not visit you? — Do I ever go out, unless you go with me? — And am I not as constantly by your Side, a if I was tied to your Apron Strings?

Mrs. Oak. Go, go, you are a false Man — Have not I found you out a thousand Times? And have not I this Moment a Letter in my Hand, which convinces me of your Baseness? — Let me know the whole Affair, or I will —

Oak. Let you know? Let Me know what you would have of me — You stop my Letter before it comes to my Hands, and then expect that I shou'd know the Contents of it.

Mrs. Oak. Heaven be praised! I stopt it. — I suspected some of these Doings for some Time past — But the Letter informs me who she is, and I'll be revenged on her sufficiently. Oh, you base Man, you!

Oak. I beg, my Dear, that you would moderate your Passion! — Shew me the Letter, and I'll convince you of my Innocence.

Mrs. Oak. Innocence! — Abominable! — Innocence! — But I am not to be made such a Fool — I am convinced of your perfidy, and very sure that —

Oak. 'Sdeath and Fire! your passion hurries you our of your Senses. — Will you hear me?

Mrs. Oak. No, you are a base Man; and I will not hear you.

Oak. Why then, my Dear, since you will neither talk reasonably yourself, nor listen to Reason from me, I shall take my Leave till you are in a better Humour. So, your Servant! (Going.

Mrs. Oak. Ay, go, you cruel Man! — Go to your Mistresses, and leave your poor Wife to her Miseries. — How unfortunate a Woman am I! — I could die with Vexation! — (Throwing herself into a Chair.

Oak. There it is — Now dare not I stir a step further — If I offer to go, she is in one of her Fits in an Instant. — Never sure was a Woman at once of so violent and so delicate a Constitution! — What shall I say to sooth her? — Nay, never make Thyself so uneasy, my Dear — Come, come, you know I love You. Nay, nay, you shall be convinced.

Mrs. Oak. I know you hate me; and that your Unkindness and Barbarity will be the Death of me. (Whining.

Oak.

Oak. Do not vex yourself a this Rate — I love you most passionately — Indeed I do — This must be some Mistake.

Mrs. Oak. O, I am an unhappy Woman.

(Weeping.

Oak. Dry up thy Tears, my Love, and be comforted! — You will find that I am not to blame in this Matter — Come, let me see this Letter. — Nay, you shall not deny me. (Taking the Letter.

Mrs. Oak. There! take it, you know the Hand! I am sure.

Oak. To Charles Oakly, Esq. (Reading.) — Hand! 'Tis a Clerk-like Hand, indeed! a good round Text! and was certainly never penned by a fair Lady.

Mrs. Oak. Ay, laugh at me, do!

Oak. Forgive me, my Love, I did not mean to laugh at thee — But what says the Letter? — (Reading.) — Daughter eloped — You must be privy to it — Scandalous — Dishonourable — Satisfaction — Revenge um, um, um — injured Father.

Henry Russet.

Mrs. Oak. (Rising.) Well, Sir — You see I have detected you — Tell me this Instant where she is concealed.

Oak. So — so — so — This hurts me — I am shock'd — (To himself.

Mrs. Oak. What are you confounded with your Guilt? Have I caught you at last?

Oak. O that wicked Charles! To decoy a young Lady from her Parents in the Country! The Profligacy of the young Fellows of this Age is abominable. (To himself.

Mrs. Oak. (Half aside and musing) Charles! — Let me see! — Charles! — No! — Impossible. — This is all a Trick.

Oak. He has certainly ruined this poor Lady.

(To himself.

Mrs. Oak. Art! Art! all Art! — There's a sudden Turn now! — You have ready Wit for Intrigue, I find.

Oak. Such an abandoned Action! — I wish I had never had the Care of him. (To himself.

Mrs. Oak. Mighty fine, Mr. Oakly! — Go on Sir, go on! — I see what you mean. — Your Assurance provokes me beyond your very Falsehood itself. — So you imagine, Sir, that this affected Concern, this flimsy Pretence about Charles, is to bring you off. — Matchless Confidence! — But I am armed against every Thing. — I am prepar'd for all your dark Schemes: I am aware of all your low Stratagems.

Oak. See there now! Was ever any Thing so provoking? To persevere in your ridiculous — For Heaven's Sake, my Dear, don't distract me. When you see my Mind thus agitated and uneasy, that a young Fellow, whom his dying Father, my own Brother, committed to my Care, should be guilty of of such enormous Wickedness; I say, when you are witness of my Distress on this Occasion, how can you be weak enough and cruel enough to —

Mrs. Oak. Prodigiously well, Sir! You do it very well. — Nay keep it up, carry it on, there's nothing like going through with it. — O you artful Creature! But, Sir, I am not to be so easily satisfied. — I do not believe a Syllable of all this — Give me the Letter — (Snatching the Letter.) — You shall sorely repent this vile Business, for I am resolved that I will know the Bottom of it. (Exit.

Oakly, solus.

Oak. This is beyond all Patience. — Provoking Woman! — Her absurd Suspicions interpret every Thing the wrong Way. She deligths to make me wretched, because she sees I am attached to her, and converts my Tenderness and Affection into the Instruments of my own Torture. — But this ungracious Boy! — In how many Troubles will he involve his own and this Lady's Family — I never imagin'd that he was of such abandon'd Principles.

ACT. II. SCENE III. IV.

Russet and Sir Harry Beagle.

Rus. Well, Sir Harry, have you heard any Thing of her?

Sir H. Yes, I have been asking Tom about her, and he says you may have her for Five Hundred Guineas.

Rus. Five Hundred Guineas! How d'ye mean? Where is she? Which Way did she take?

Sir H. Why first she went to Epsom, then to Lincoln, then to Nottingham, and now she is at York.

Rus.

Ruf. Impoſſible! She could not go over half the Ground in the Time. What the Devil are you talking of?

Sir H. Of the Mare you was juſt now ſaying you wanted to buy.

Ruf. The Devil take the Mare! — Who wou'd think of her, when I am mad about an Affair of ſo much more Conſequence?

Sir H. You ſeem'd mad about her a little while ago. She's a fine Mare, and a Thing of Shape and Blood.

Ruf. Damn her Blood! — Harriot! My dear provoking Harriot! Where can ſhe be? Have you got any Intelligence of her?

Sir H. No, Faith not I: We ſeem to be quite thrown out here — But however I have ordered Tom to try if he can hear any Thing of her among the Oſtlers.

Ruf. Why don't you enquire after her yourſelf? Why don't you run up and down the whole Town after her? — T'other young Raſcal knows where ſhe is, I warrant you — What a Plague it is to have a Daughter! When one loves her to Diſtraction, and has toil'd and labour'd to make her happy, the ungrateful Slut will ſooner go to Hell her own Way — But ſhe ſhall have him — I will make her happy, if I break her Heart for it — A provoking Gipſy! — To run away, and torment her poor Father, that doats on her! — I'll never ſee her Face again — Sir Harry, how can we get any intelligence of her? Why don't you ſpeak? Why don't you tell me? — Zouns! You ſeem as indifferent as if you did not care a Farthing about her.

Sir H. Indifferent! You may well call me Indifferent — This damn'd Chace after her will coſt me a Thouſand — If it had not been for her, I wou'd not have been off the Courſe this Week, to have ſav'd the Lives of my whole Family — I'll hold you ſix to two that —

Ruf. Zouns! Hold your Tongue, or talk more to the Purpoſe — I ſwear, ſhe is too good for you — You don't deſerve ſuch a Wife — A fine, dear, ſweet, lovely, charming Girl! — She'll break my Heart. — How ſhall I find her out? — Do, prithee, Sir Harry, my dear honeſt Friend, conſider how we may diſcover where ſhe is fled to.

Sir H. Suppoſe you put an Advertiſement into the Newspapers, deſcribing her Marks, her Age, her Height, and where ſhe ſtray'd from. I recover'd a bay Mare once by that Method.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0275
DFG

Ruf. Advertiſe her! — What! Deſcribe my Daughter, and expoſe her in the Publick Papers, with a Reward for bringing her home, like Horſes, ſtolen or ſtray'd! — Recover'd a bay Mare! — The Devil's in the Fellow! — He thinks of nothing but Racers, and bay Mares, and Stallions. — 'Sdeath! I wiſh your —

Sir H. I wiſh Harriot was fairly pounded. It wou'd ſave us both a deal of Trouble.

Ruf. Which way ſhall I turn myſelf! — I am half diſtracted. — If I go to that young Dog's Houſe, he has certainly conveyed her ſomewhere out of my Reach — If ſhe does not ſend to me to-day, I'll give her up for ever — Perhaps though, ſhe may have met with ſome Accident, and has nobody to aſſiſt her — No, ſhe is certainly with that young Raſcal. — I wiſh ſhe was dead, and I was dead — I'll blow young Oakly's Brains out.

Enter Tom.

Sir H. Well, Tom, how is poor Snip?

Tom. A little better, Sir, after his warm Maſh: But Lady, the Pointing Bitch that followed you all the Way, is deadly Foot-ſore.

Ruf. Damn Snip and Lady! — Have you heard any thing of Harriot?

Tom. Why I came on Purpoſe to let my Maſter and your Honour know, that John Oſtler ſays as how, juſt ſuch a Lady, as I told him Madam Harriot was, came here in a four wheel Chaiſe, and was fetch'd away ſoon after by a fine Lady in a Chariot.

Ruf. Did ſhe come alone?

Tom. Quite alone, only a Servant-Maid, pleaſe your Honour.

Ruf. And what Part of the Town did they go to?

Tom. John Oſtler ſays as how, they bid the Coachman drive to Groſvenor Square.

Sir H. Soho! Puſs — Yoics!

Ruf. She is certainly gone to that young Rogue — He has got his Aunt to fetch her from hence — Or elſe ſhe is with her own Aunt, Lady Freelove — They both live in that Part of the Town. I'll go to his Houſe, and in the mean while, Sir Harry, You ſall ſtep to Lady Freelove's. We'll find her, I warrant You. I'll teach my young Miſtreſs to be gadding. She ſhall marry you tonight. Come along, Sir Harry,

Harry, come along! We won't lose a Minute. Come along!

Sir H. Soho! Hark forward! Wind 'em and cross 'em! Hark forward! Yoics! Yoics! (Exeunt.

HISTORY OF THE INVINCIBLE ARMADA. *)

King Philip II. of Spain, though he had not yet declared war, no account of the hostilities, which Elizabeth every where committed upon him, had long harboured a secret and violent desire of revenge against her. His ambition also and the hopes of extending his empire were much encouraged by the present prosperous situation of his affairs; by the conquest of Portugal, the acquisition of the East-Indian commerce and settlements, and the yearly importation of vast treasures from America. The point, on which he rested his highest glory, the perpetual object of his policy, was to support orthodoxy and exterminate heresy; and as the power and credit of Elizabeth were the chief bulwark of the protestants, he hoped, if he could subdue that princess, to acquire the eternal renown, of being able to re-unite the whole christian world in the catholic communion. Above all, his indignation against his revolted subjects in the Netherlands instigated him to attack the English who had encouraged that insurrection, and who, by their near neighbourhood, were so well enabled to support the Hollanders, that he could never hope to reduce these rebels, while the power of that kingdom remained entire and unbroken. To subdue England seemed a necessary preparative to the restablishment of his authority in the Netherlands; and notwithstanding all appearances, the former was in itself, as a more important, so a more easy, untertaking than the latter. That kingdom lay nearer Spain than the Low Countries, and was more exposed to invasions from that quarter; after an enemy had once obtained entrance, it was neither fortified by art nor nature; a long peace had deprived it of all military discipline and experience; and the catholics, in which it still abounded, would be ready, it was hoped, to join any invader, who should free them from those grievous persecutions, at present exercised against them, and should revenge the death of the Queen of Scots, on whom they had fixed all their affections. The fate of England muſt be decided in one battle at ſea, and another at land; and what compariſon between the Engliſh and Spaniards, either in point of naval force, or in the numbers, reputation, and veteran bravery of their armies? Beſides the acquiſition of ſo great a kingdom, ſucceſs againſt England enſured the immediate ſubjection of the Hollanders, who, attacked on every hand, and deprived of all ſupport, muſt yield their ſtubborn necks to that yoke, which they had ſo long reſiſted. Happily this conqueſt; as it was of the utmoſt importance to the grandeur of Spain, would not at preſent be oppoſed by the jealouſy of the neighbouring powers, naturally ſo much intereſted to prevent the ſucceſs of that enterprize. A truce was lately concluded with the Turks; the empire was in the hands of a friend and near ally; and France, the perpetual rival of Spain, was ſo torn with inteſtine commotions, that ſhe had no leiſure to pay attention to her foreign intereſts. This favourable opportunity, therefore, which might never again preſent itſelf, muſt be ſeized; and one bold effort made for acquiring that aſcendant in Europe, to which the preſent greatneſs and proſperity of the Spaniards ſeemed ſo fully to intitle them.

*) David Hume's History of England. Lond. 8 Vol. 1770. 4.

Theſe hopes and motives engaged Philip, notwithſtanding his cautious temper, to undertake this hazardous enterprize; and tho' the Prince, now created by the pope, duke of Parma, when conſulted, oppoſed the attempt, at leaſt repreſented the neceſſity of previouſly getting poſſeſſion of ſome ſea-port town in the Netherlands, which might afford a retreat to the Spaniſh navy, it was determined by the catholic monarch to proceed immediately to the execution of his ambitious project. During ſome time he had been ſecretly making preparations; but as ſoon as the reſolution was fully taken, every part of his vaſt empire reſounded with the noiſe of armaments, and all his miniſters, generals, and admirals, were employed in forwarding the deſign. The marquis of Santa Cruz, a ſea officer of great reputation and experience, was deſtined to command the fleet; and by his counſels were the naval equipments conducted. In all the ports of Sicily, Naples, Spain, and Portugal, artizans were employed in building veſſels of uncommon ſize and force; naval ſtores were bought at a great expence; proviſions amaſſed; armies levied and quartered in the maritime towns of Spain; and plans laid for fitting out ſuch a fleet and embarkation as had never before had its equal in Europe. The military preparations parations in Flanders were no less formidable. Troops from all quarters were every moment assembling, to reinforce the duke of Parma. Capizuchi and Spinelli, conducted forces from Italy: The marquis of Borgaut, a prince of the house of Austria, levied troops in Germany: The Walloon and Burgundian regiments were compleated or augmented: The Spanish infantry was supplied with recruits; and an army of thirty four thousand men was assembled in the Netherlands, and kept in readiness to be transported into England. The duke of Parma employed all the carpenters whom he could procure, either in Flanders or in Lower Germany, and the coasts of the Baltic; and he built at Dunkirk, and Newport, but especially at Antwerp, a great number of boats and flat bottomed vessels, for the transporting of his infantry and cavalry. The most renowned nobility and princes of Italy and Spain were ambitious of sharing in the honour of this great enterprize. Don Amadæus of Savoy, Don John of Medicis, Vespasian Gonzaga, duke of Sabionetta, and the duke of Pastrana, hastened to join the army under the duke of Parma. About two thousand volunteers in Spain, many of them men of family, had inlisted in the service. No doubt was entertained, but such vast preparations, conducted by officers of such consummate skill, must finally be successful. And the Spaniards, ostentatious of their power, and elevated with vain hopes, had already denominated their navy the Invincible Armada.

News of these extraordinary preparations soon reached the court of London; and notwithstanding the secrecy of the Spanish council, and their pretending to employ this force in the Indies, it was easily concluded, that they meant to make some effort against England. The Queen had foreseen the invasion; and finding that she must now contend for her crown with the whole force of Spain, she made preparations for resistance; nor was she terrified with that power, by which, all Europe apprehended, she must of necessity be overwhelmed. Her force indeed seemed very unequal to resist so potent an enemy. All the sailors in England amounted at that time to about fourteen thousand men. The size of the English shipping was, in general, so small, that, except a few of the Queen's ships of war, there were not four vessels belonging to the merchants which exceeded four hundred tons. The royal navy consisted only of twenty-eight sail, many of which were of small size; none of them exceeding the bulk of our largest frigates, and most of them deserving rather the name of pinnaces than of ships. The only advantage of the Engliſh fleet conſiſted in the dexterity and courage of the ſeamen, who, being accuſtomed to ſail in tempeſtuous ſeas, and expoſe themſelves to all dangers, as much exceeded in this particular the Spaniſh mariners, as their veſſels were inferior in ſize and force to theſe of that nation. All the commercial towns of England were required to furniſh ſhips for reinforcing this ſmall navy; and they diſcovered, on the preſent occaſion, great alacrity in defending their liberty and religion againſt thoſe imminent perils, with which they were menaced. The citizens of London, in order to ſhew their zeal in the common cauſe, inſtead of fifteen veſſels, which they were commanded to equip, voluntarily fitted out double the number. The gentry and nobility hired, and armed, and manned, forty-three ſhips at their own charge; and all the loans of money, which the Queen demanded, were frankly granted by the perſons applied to. Lord Howard of Effingham, a man of courage and capacity, was admiral, and took on him the command of the navy: Drake, Hawkins, and Frobiſher, the moſt renowned ſeamen in Europe, ſerved under him. The principal fleet was ſtationed at Plymouth. A ſmaller ſquadron, conſiſting of forty veſſels, Engliſh and Flemiſh, was commanded by the lord Seymour, ſecond ſon of protector Somerſet; and lay off Dunkirk, in order to intercept the duke of Parma.

The land forces of England, compared to thoſe of Spain, poſſeſſed contrary qualities to its naval power: They were more numerous than the enemy, but much inferior in diſcipline, reputation, and experience. An army of twenty thouſand men was diſpoſed in different bodies along the ſouth coaſt; and orders were given them, if they could not hinder the Spaniards from landing, to retire backwards, to waſte the country around, and to wait for reinforcement from the neighbouring counties, before they approached the enemy. A body of twenty-two thouſand foot, and a thouſand horſe, under the command of the earl of Leiceſter, was ſtationed at Tilbury, in order to defend the capital. The principal army conſiſted of thirty-four thouſand foot, and two thouſand horſe, and was commanded by lord Hundſdon. Theſe forces were reſerved for guarding the Queen's perſon; and were appointed to march whitherſoever the enemy ſhould appear. The fate of England, if all the Spaniſh armies ſhould be able to land, ſeemed to depend on the iſſue of a ſingle battle; and men of reflection entertained the moſt diſmal apprehenſions, when they conſidered the force of fifty thouſand veteran Spaniards, commanded by experienced officers, officers, under the duke of Parma, the most consummate general of the age; and compared this formidable armament with the military power, which England, not enervated by peace, but long disused to war, could muster up against it.

The chief support of the kingdom seemed to consist in the vigour and prudence of the Queen's conduct; who, undismayed by the present dangers, issued all her orders with tranquillity, animated her people to a steady resistance, and employed every resource, which either her domestic situation or her foreign alliances could afford her. She sent Sir Robert Sidney into Scotland; and exhorted the King to remain attached to her, and to consider the danger, which at present menaced his sovereignty no less than her own, from the ambition of the Spanish tyrant. The ambassador found James well disposed to cultivate an union with England, and that prince even kept himself prepared to march with the force of his whole kingdom to the assistance of Elizabeth. Her authority with the King of Denmark, and the tye of their common religion, engaged this monarch, upon her application, to seize a squadron of ships, which Philip had bought or hired in the Danish harbours: The Hanse Towns, though not at that time on good terms with Elizabeth, were induced, by the same motives, to retard so long the equipment of some vessels in their ports, that they became useless to the purpose of invading England. All the protestants throughout Europe regarded this enterprize as the critical event, which was to decide for ever the fate of their religion; and though unable, by reason of their distance, to join their force to that of Elizabeth, they kept their eyes fixed on her conduct and fortune, and beheld with anxiety, mixed with admiration, the intrepid countenance, with which she encountered that dreadful tempest, which was every moment approaching towards her.

The Queen also was sensible, that, next to the general popularity, which she injoyed, and the confidence, which her subjects reposed in her prudent government, the firmest support of her throne consisted in the general zeal of the people for the protestant religion, and the strong prejudices which they had imbibed against popery. She took care, on the present occasion, to revive in the nation this attachment to their own sect, and this abhorrence of the opposite. The English were reminded of their former danger from the tyranny of Spain: All the barbarities, exercised by Mary against the protestants, were ascribed to the counsels of that bigotted and imperious nation: The bloody massacres in the Indies, the unrelenting executions in the Low Countries, the horrid cruelties and iniquities of the inquisition, were set before men's eyes: A list and description was published, and pictures dispersed, of the several instruments of torture, with which, it was pretended, the Spanish Armada was loaded: And every artifice, as well as reason, was employed, to animate the people to a vigorous defence of their religion, their laws, and their liberties.

But while the Queen, in this critical emergence, rouzed the animosity of the nation against popery, she treated the partizans of that sect with moderation, and gave not way to an undistinguishing fury against them. Though she knew, that Sixtus Quintus, the present pope, famous for his rapacity and tyranny, had fulminated a new bull of excommunication against her, had deposed her from the throne, had absolved her subjects from their oaths of allegiance, had published a crusade against England, and had granted plenary indulgences to every one engaged in the present invasion; she would not believe, that all her catholic subjects could be so blinded, as to sacrifice to bigotry their duty to their sovereign, and the liberty and independency of their native country. She rejected all violent counsels, by which she was urged to seek pretences for dispatching the leaders of that party: She would not even confine any considerable number of them: And the catholics, sensible of this good usage, generally expressed great zeal for the public defence. Some gentlemen of that sect, conscious that they could not justly expect any trust or authority, entered themselves as volunteers in the fleet or army: Some equipped ships at their own charge, and gave the command of them to protestants: Others were active in animating their tenants, and vassals, and neighbours, to the defence of their country: And every rank of men, burying for the present all party distinctions, seemed to prepare themselves, with order as well as vigour, to resist the violence of these invaders.

The more to excite the martial spirit of the nation, the Queen appeared on horseback in the camp at Tilbury; and riding through the lines, discovered a chearful and animated countenance, exhorted the soldiers to remember their duty to their contry and their religion, and professed her intention, though a woman, to lead them herself into the field against the enemy and rather to perish in battle than survive the ruin and slavery of her people. By this spirited behaviour she revived the tenderness and admiration of the soldiery: An attachment to to her person became a kind of enthusiasm among them: And they asked one another, whether it were possible, that English men could abandon this glorious cause, could display less courage than appeared in the female sex, or could ever, by any dangers, be induced to relinquish the defence of their heroic princess.

The Spanish Armada was ready in the beginning of May (1588) but the moment it was preparing to sail, the marquis of Santa Cruz, the admiral, was seized with a violent fever, of which he soon after died. The vice-admiral, the duke of Paliano, by a strange concurrence of accidents, at the very same time, suffered the same fate: and the King appointed for admiral the duke of Medina Sidonia, a nobleman of great family, but unexperienced in action, and entirely unacquainted with sea affairs. Alcarede was appointed vice-admiral. This misfortune, besides the loss of so great an officer as Santa Cruz, retarded the sailing of the Armada, and gave the English more time for their preparations to oppose them. At last, the fleet, full of hopes and alacrity, set sail from Lisbon; but next day met with a violent tempest, which scattered the ships, sunk some of the smallest, and forced the rest to take shelter in the Groyne, where they waited till they could be refitted. When news of this event was carried to England, the Queen concluded, that the design of an invasion was disappointed for this summer; and being always ready to lay hold of every pretence for saving money, she made Walsingham write to the admiral, directing him to lay up some of the larger ships, and to discharge the seamen: But lord Effingham, who was not so sanguine in his hopes, used the freedom to disobey these orders; and he begged leave to retain all the ships in service, tho' it should be at is own expence. He took advantage of a north wind, and sailed towards the coast of Spain, with an intention of attacking the enemy in their harbours; but the wind changing to the south, he became apprehensive, less they might have set sail, and by passing him at sea, invade England, now exposed by the absence of the fleet. He returned, therefore, with the utmost expedition to Plymouth, and lay at anchor in that harbour.

Meanwhile, all the damages of the Armada were repaired; and the Spaniards with fresh hopes set out again to sea, in prosecution of their enterprize. The fleed consisted of a hundred and thirty vessels, of which near a hundred were galleons, and were of greater size than any ever before used in Europe. It carried on board nineteen thousand two hundred and ninety-five soldiers five soldiers, eight thousand four hundred and fifty-six mariners, two thousand and eighty-eight gally slaves, and two thousand six hundred and thirty great pieces of brass ordnance. It was victualled for six months; and was attended with twenty lesser ships, called caravals, and ten salves with six oars apiece.

The plan formed by the King of Spain, was, that the Armade should sail to the coast opposite to Dunkirk and Newport; and having chased away all English or Flemish vessels, which might obstruct the passage, (for it was never supposed they could make opposition) should join themselves with the duke of Parma, should thence make sail to the Thames, and having landed the whole Spanish army, thus complete at one blow the entire conquest of England. In prosecution of this scheme, Philip gave orders to the duke of Medina, that, in passing along the channel, he should sail as near the coast of France as he could with safety; that he should by this policy avoid meeting with the English fleet; and keeping in view the main enterprize, should neglect all smaller successes, which might prove an obstacle, or even interpose a delay, to the acquisition of a kingdom. After the Armada was under sail, they took a fisherman, who informed them, that the English admiral had been lately at sea, had heard of the tempest wich scattered the Armada, had retired back into Plymouth, and no longer expecting an invasion this season, had laid up his ships, and discharged most of the seamen. From this false intelligence the duke of Medina conceived the great facility of attacking and destroying the English ships in harbour; and he was tempted, by the prospect of so decisive an advantage, to break his orders, and make sail directly for Plymouth: A resolution which proved the safety of England. The Lizard was the first land made by the Armada, about sun-set; and as the Spaniards took it for the Ram-head near Plymouth, they bore out to sea, with an intention of returning next day, and attacking the English navy. They were descried by Fleming a Scottish pyrate, who was roving in these seas, and wo immediately set sail, to inform the English admiral of their approach: Another fortunate event, which contributed extremely to the safety of the fleet. Effingham had just time to get out of port, when he saw the Spanish Armada coming full sail towards him, disposed in the form a crescent, and stretching the distance of seven miles from the extremity of one division to that of the other.

The writers of that age raise their style by a pompous description of this spectacle; the most magnificent that had ever ever appeared upon the ocean, infusing equal terror and admiration into the minds of all beholders. The lofty masts, the swelling sails, and the towering prows of the Spanish galleons, seem impossible to be justly painted, otherwise than by assuming the colours of poetry; and an eloquent historian of Italy, in imitation of Camden, has asserted, that the Armada, though the ships bore every sail, yet advanced with a slow motion; as if the ocean groaned with supporting, and the winds were tired with impelling, so enormous a weight. The truth, however, is, the largest of the Spanish vessels would scarcely pass for third rates in the present navy of England; yet were they so ill framed, or so ill governed, that they were quite unwieldy, and could not sail upon a wind, nor tack on an occasion, nor be managed in stormy weather by the seamen. Neither the mechanics of ship-building, nor the experience of mariners, had attained so great perfection as could serve for the security and government of such bulky vessels; and the English, who had already had experience how unserviceable they commonly were, beheld without dismay their tremendous appearance.

Effingham gave orders, not to come to close fight with the Spaniards; where the size of the ships he suspected, and the numbers of the soldiers, would be a disadvantage to the English; but to cannonade them at a distance, and to wait the opportunity, which winds, currents, or various accidents must afford him, of intercepting some scattered vessels of the enemy. Nor was it long before the event answered expectation. A great ship of Biscay, on board of which was a considerable part of the Spanish money, was set on fire by accident; and while all hands were employed in extinguishing it, she fell behind the rest of the Armada: The great galleon of Andaluzia was detained by the springing of her mast: And both these vessels were taken, after some resistance, by Sir Francis Drake. As the Armada advanced up the channel, the English hung upon its rear, and still invested it with skirmishes. Each trial abated the confidence of the Spaniards, and added courage to the English; and the latter soon found, that even in close fight the size of the Spanish ships was no advantage to them. Their bulk exposed them the more to the fire of the enemy; while their cannon, placed too high, shot over the heads of the English. The alarm having now reached the coast of England, the nobility and gentry hastened out with their vessels from every harbour, and reinforced the admiral. The earls of Oxford, Northum-

Northumberland, and Cumberland, Sir Thomas Cecil, Sir Robert Cecil, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir Thomas Vavasor, Sir Thomas Gerrard, Sir Charles Blount, with many others, distinguished themselves by this generous and disinterested service of their country. The English fleet, after the conjunction of these ships amounted to an hundred and forty sail.

The Armada had now reached Calais, and cast anchor before that place; in expectation, that the duke of Parma, who had got intelligence of their approach, would put to sea, and join his forces to them. The English admiral practised here a successful stratagem upon the Spaniards. He took eight of his smaller ships, and filling them with all combustible materials, sent them, one after another, into the midst of the enemy. The Spaniards fancied, that they were fireships of the same contrivance with a famous vessel, which had lately done so much execution in the Shelde near Antwerp; and they immediately cut their cables, and took to flight with the greatest disorder and precipitation. The English fell upon them next morning, while in confusion; and besides doing great damage to other ships, they took or destroyed about twelve of the enemy.

By this time, it was become apparent, that the intention, for wich these preparations were made by the Spaniards, was entirely frustrated. The vessels, provided by the duke of Parma, were made for transporting soldiers not for fighting; and that general, when urged to leave the harbour, positively refused to expose his florishing army to such apparent hazard, at it must incur; while the English, not only were able to keep the sea, but seemed even to triumph over their enemy. The Spanish admiral found, in many rencounters, that while, he lost so considerable a part of his own navy, he had destroyed only one small vessel of the English; and he foresaw, that, by continuing so unequal a combat, he must draw inevitable destruction on all the remainder. He prepared therefore to return homewards; but as the winds were contrary to his passage through the channel, he resolved to sail northwards, and making the tour of the island reach the Spanish harbours by the ocean. The English fleet followed him during some time; and had not their ammunition fallen short, by the negligence of the offices in supplying them, they had obliged the whole Armada to surrender at discretion. The duke of Medina had once taken that resolution; but was diverted from it by the advise of his confessor. This conclusion of the enterprize would have been more more glorious to the Engliſh; but the event proved equally fatal to the Spaniards. A violent tempeſt overtook the Armada after it paſſed the Orkneys: The ſhips had already loſt their anchors, and were obliged to keep to ſea: The mariners, unaccuſtomed to ſuch hardſhips, and not able to govern ſuch unwieldy veſſels, yielded to the fury of the ſtorm, and allowed their ſhips to drive either on the weſtern iſles of Scotland, or on the coaſt of Ireland, where they were miſerably wrecked. Not a half of the navy returned to Spain; and the ſeamen, as well as ſoldiers, who remained, were ſo overcome with hardſhip and fatigue, and ſo diſpirited by their diſcomfiture, that they filled all Spain with accounts of the deſperate valour of the Engliſh, and of the tempeſtuous violence of that ocean which ſurrounds them.

Such was the miſerable and diſhonourable concluſion of an enterprize, which had been preparing for three years, which has exhauſted the revenue and force of Spain, and which had long filled all Europe with anxiety or expectation. Philip, who was a ſlave to his ambition, but had an entire command over his contenance, no ſoomer heard of the mortifying event, which blaſted all his hopes, than he fell on his knees, and rendering thanks for that gracious diſpenſation of providence, expreſſed his joy, that the calamity was not greater. The Spaniſh prieſts, who had ſo often bleſt this holy cruſade, and foretold its infallible ſucceſs, were ſomewhat at a loſs to account for the victory gained over the catholic monarch by excommunicated heretics and an execrable uſurper: But they at laſt diſcovered, that all the calamities of the Spaniards had proceeded from their allowing the infideel Moors to live among them.

CAPT. LEMUEL GULLIVER'S VOYAGE TO LILIPUT. *)

We ſet ſail from Briſtol, May 4th, 1699, and our voyage a firſt was very proſperous.

It would not be proper, for ſome reaſons, to trouble the reader with the particulars of our adventures in thoſe ſeas: let it ſuffice to inform him, that, in our paſſage from thence to the Eaſt-Indies, we were driven by a violent ſtorm to the north-weſt north-west of Van Diemen's land. By an observation we found ourselves in the latitude of 30 degrees 2 minutes south. Twelve of our crew were dead by immoderate labour, and ill food; the rest were in a very weak condition. On the fifth of November, which was the beginning of summer in those parts, the weather being very hazy, the seamen spied a rock within half a cable's length of the ship; but the wind was so strong, that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split. Six of the crew, of whom I was one, having let down the boat into the sea, made a shift to get clear of the ship and the rock. We rowed by my computation about three leagues, till we were able to work no longer, being already spent with labour while we where in the ship. We therefore trusted ourselves to the mercy of the waves, and in about half an hour the boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the north. What became of my companions in the boat, as well as of those who escaped on the rock, or were left in the vessel, I cannot tell; but conclude they were all lost. For my own part, I swam as fortune directed me, and was pushed forward by wind and tide. I often let my legs drop, and could feel no bottom: but when I was almost gone, and able to struggle no longer, I found myself within my depth; and by this time the storm was much abated. The declivity was so small, that I walked near a mile before I got to the shore, which I conjectured was about eight o'clock in the evening. I then advanced forward near half a mile, but could not discover any signs of houses or inhabitants; at least I was in so weak a condition, that I did not observe them. I was extremely tired, and with that, and the heat of the weather, and about half a pint of brandy that I drank as I left the ship, I found myself much inclined to sleep. I lay down on the grass, which was very short and soft, where I slept sounder than ever I remembered to have done in my life, and, as I reckoned, about nine hours; for when I awaked, it was just daylight. I attempted to rise, but was not able to stir: for as I happened to lie on my back, I found my arms and legs were strongly fastened on each side to the ground; and my hair, which was long and thick, tied down in the same manner. I likewise felt several slender ligatures a cross my body, from my arm-pits to my thighs. I could only look upwards, the sun began to grow hot, and the light offended my eyes. I heard a confused noise about me but in the posture in I lay, could see nothing except the sky.

*) The Works of D. Jonathan Swift. Lond. 1765. Vol. 12. 12.

ſky. In a little time I felt ſomething alive moving on my left leg, which advancing gently forward over my breaſt came almoſt up to my chin; when bending my eyes downward as much as I could, I perceived it to be a human creature not ſix inches high, with a bow and arrow in his hands, and a quiver at his back. In the mean time, I felt at leaſt forty more of the ſame kind (as I conjectured) following the firſt. I was in the utmoſt aſtoniſhment, and roared ſo loud, that they all ran back in a fright; and ſome of them, as I was afterwards told, were hurt with the falls they got by leaping from my ſides upon the ground. However, they ſoon returned, and one of them, who ventured ſo far as to get a full ſight of my face, lifting up his hands and eyes by way of admiration, cried out in a ſhrill but diſtinct voice, hekinah degul: the others repeated the ſame words ſeveral times, but I then knew not what they meant. I lay all this while, as the reader may believe, in great uneaſineſs; at length, ſtruggling to get looſe, I had the fortune to break the ſtrings, and wrench out the pegs that faſtened my left arm to the ground; for, by lifting it up to my face, I diſcovered the methods they had taken to bind me, and at the ſame time with a violent pull, which gave me exceſſive pain, I a little looſened the ſtrings that tied down my hair on the left ſide, ſo that I was juſt able to turn my head about two inches. But the creatures ran of a ſecond time, before I could ſeize them; whereupon there was a great ſhout in a very ſhrill accent, and after it ceaſed, I heard one of them cry aloud, tolgo phonac; when in an inſtant I felt above an hundred arrows diſcharged on my left hand, which pricked me like ſo many needles; and beſides, they ſhot another flight into the air, as we do bombs in Europe, where of many, I ſuppoſe, fell on my body, (though I felt them not) and ſome on my face, which I immediately covered with my left hand. When this ſhower of arrows was over, I fell a groaning with grief and pain, and then ſtriving again to get looſe, they diſcharged another volley larger than the firſt, and ſome of them attempted with ſpears to ſtick me in the ſides; but by good luck I had on me a buff jerkin, which they could not pierce. I thought it the moſt prudent method to lie ſtill, and my deſign was to continue ſo till night, when, my left hand being already looſe, I could eaſily free myſelf: and as for the inhabitants, I had reaſon to believe I might be a match for the greateſt army they could bring againſt me, if they were all of the ſame ſize with him, that I saw. But fortune disposed otherways of me. When the people observed I was quiet, they discharged no more arrows: but, by the noise I heard, I knew their numbers increased; and about four yards from me, over-against my right ear, I heard a knocking for above an hour, like that of people at work; when turning my head that way, as well as the pegs and strings would permit me, I saw a stage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants, with two or three ladders to mount it: from whence one of them, who seemed to be a person of quality, made me a long speech, whereof I understood not one syllable. But I should have mentioned, that before the principal person began his oration, he cried out three times, langro dehul san; (these words and the former were afterwards repeated and explained to me). Whereupon immediately about fifty of the inhabitants came and cut the strings that fastened the left side of my head, which gave me the liberty of turning it to the right, and of observing the person and gesture of him that was to speak. He appeared to be of a middle age, and taller than any of the other three who attended him, whereof one was a page that held up his train, and seemed to be somewhat longer than my middle finger; the other two stood one on each side to support him. He acted every part of an orator, and I could observe many periods of threatenings, and others of promises, pity, and kindness. I answered in a few words, but in the most submissive manner, lifting up my left hand and both my eyes to the sun, as calling him for a witness; and being almost famished with hunger, having not eaten a morsel for some hours before I left the ship, I found the demands of nature so strong upon me, that I could not forbear shewing my impatience (perhaps against the strict rules of decency) by putting my finger frequently to my mouth, to signify that I wanted food. The hurgo (for so they call a great lord, as I afterwards learnt) understood me very well. He descended from the stage, and commanded that several ladders should be applied to my sides, on which above an hundred of the inhabitants mounted, and walked towards my mouth, laden with baskets full of meat, which had been provided and sent thither by the king's orders, upon the first intelligence he received of me. I observed there was the flesh of several animals, but could not distinguish them by the taste. There were shoulders, legs, and loins, shaped like those of mutton, and very well dressed, dreſſed, but ſmaller than the wings of a lark. I eat them by two or three at a mouthful, and took three loaves at a time about the bigneſs of muſket bullets. They ſupplied me as faſt as they could, ſhewing a thouſand marks of wonder and aſtoniſhment at my bulk and appetite. I then made another ſign, that I wanted drink. They found by my eating, that a ſmall quantity would not ſuffice me, and being a moſt ingenious people, they flung up with great dexterity one of their largeſt hogſheads, then rolled it towards my hand, and beat out the top; I drank it off at a draught, which I might well do, for it did not hold half a pint, and taſted like a ſmall wine of Burgundy, but much more delicious. They brought me a ſecond hogſhead, which I drank in the ſame manner, and made ſigns for more; but they had none to give me. When I had performed theſe wonders, they ſhouted for joy, and danced upon my breaſt, repeating ſeveral times as they did at firſt, hekinah degul. They made me a ſign that I ſhould throw down the two hogſheads, but firſt warning the people below to ſtand out of the way, crying aloud, horach mevola, and when they ſaw the veſſels in the air, there was an univerſal ſhout of hekinah degul. I confeſs, I was often tempted, while they were paſſing backwards and forwards on my body, to ſeize forty or fifty of the firſt that came in my reach, and daſh them againſt the ground. But the remembrance of what I had felt, which probably might not be the worſt they could do, and the promiſe of honour I made them, for ſo I interpreted my ſubmiſſive behaviour, ſoon drove out theſe imaginations. Beſides, I now conſidered myſelf as bound by the laws of hoſpitality to a people, who had treated me with ſo much expence and magnificence. However, in my thoughts I could not ſufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of theſe diminutive mortals, who durſt venture to mount and walk upon my body, while one of my hands was at liberty, without trembling at the very ſight of ſo prodigious a creature, as I muſt appear to them. After ſome time, when they obſerved that I made no more demands for meat, there appeared before me a perſon of high rank from his imperial majeſty. His excellency, having mounted on the ſmall of my right leg, advanced forwards up to my face, with about a dozen of his retinue. And producing his credentials under the ſignet royal, which he applied cloſe to my eyes, ſpoke about ten minutes without any ſigns of anger, but with a kind of determinate reſolution; often pointing forwards, which, as I afterwards found, was towards the capital city, about half mile distant, whither it was agreed by his majesty in council that I must be conveyed. I answered in few words, but to no purpose, an made a sign with my hand that was loose, putting it to the other (but over his excellency's head for fear of hurting him or his train) and then to my own head and body, to signify that I desired my liberty. It appeared that he understood me well enough, for he shook his head by way of disapprobation and held his hand in a posture to shew, that I must be carried as a prisoner. However, he made other signs to let me understand, that I should have meat and drink enough, and very good treatment. Whereupon I once more thought of attempting to break my bonds, but again, when I felt the smart of their arrows upon my face and hands, which were all in blisters, and many of the darts still sticking in them, and observing likewise that the number of my enemies increased, I gave tokens to let them know, that they might do with me what they pleased. Upon this the burgo and his train withdrew with much civility and chearful countenances. Soon after I heard a general shout, with frequent repetitions of the words, peplom selan, and I felt great numbers of people on my left side relaxing the cords to such a degree, that I was able to turn upon my right, and to ease myself with making water; which I very plentifully did, to the great astonishment of the people, who conjecturing, by my motion, what I was going to do, immediately opened to the right and left on that side, to avoid the torrent which fell with such noise and violence from me. But before this, they had daubed my face and both my hands with a sort of ointment very pleasant to the smell, which in a few minutes removed all the smart of their arrows. These circumstances, added to the refreshment I had received by their victuals and drink, which were very nourishing, disposed me to sleep. I slept about eight hours, as I was afterwards assured; and it was no wonder; for the physicians, by the emperor's order, had mingled a sleepy potion in the hogsheads of wine.

It seems that, upon the first moment I was discovered sleeping on the ground after my landing, the emperor had early notice of it by an express; and determined in council, that I should be tied in the manner I have related, (which was done in the night while I slept) that plenty of meat and drink should be sent to me, and a machine prepared to carry me to the capital city.

This

This resolution perhaps may appear very bold and dangerous, and I am confident would not be imitated by any prince in Europe on the like occasion; however in my opinion, it was extremely prudent, as well as generous: for supposing these people had endeavoured to kill me with their spears and arrows while I was asleep, I should certainly have awaked with the first sense of smart, which might so far have rouzed my rage and strenght, as to have enabled me to break the strings wherewith I was tied; after which, as they were not able to make resistance, so they could expect no mercy.

These people are most excellent mathematicians, and arrived to a great perfection in mechanicks by the countenance and encouragement of the emperor, who is a renowned patron of learning. This prince has several machines fixed on wheels for the carriage of trees and other great weights. He often builds his largest men of war, whereof some are nine feet long, in the woods where the timber grows, and has them carried on these engines three or four hundred yards to the sea. Five hundred carpenters and engineers were immediately set at work to prepare the greatest engine they had. It was a frame of wood raised three inches from the ground, about seven feet long and four wide, moving upon twenty-two wheels. The shout I heard was upon the arrival of this engine, which it seems set out in four hours after my landing. It was brought parallel to me, as I lay. But the principal difficulty was to raise and place me in this vehicle. Eighty poles, each of one foot high, were erected for this purpose, and very strong cords of the bigness of pack thread were fastened by hooks to many bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck, my hands, my body, and my legs. Nine hundred of the strongest men were employed to draw up these cords by many pullies fastened on the poles, and thus, in less than three hours, I was raised and slung into the engine, and there tied fast. All this I was told, for, while the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Fifteen hundred of the emperor's largest horses, each about four inches and an half high, were employed to draw me towards the metropolis, which, as I said, was half a mile distant.

About four hours after we began our journey, I awaked by a very ridiculous accident; for the carriage being stopt a while to adjust something that was out of order, two or three of the young natives had the curiosity to see how I looked when I was asleep; they climbed up into the engine; and advancing very softly to my face, one of them, an officer in the guards, put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my left nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently: whereupon they stole off unperceived, and it was three weeks before I knew the cause of my awaking so suddenly. We made a long march the remaining part of the day, and rested at night with five hundred guards on each side of me, half with torches, and half with bows and arrows, ready to shoot me, if I should offer to stir. The next morning at sun-rise we continued our march, and arrived within two hundred yards of the city-gates about noon. The emperor, and all his court, came out to meet us, but his great officers would by no means suffer his majesty to endanger his person by mounting on my body.

At the place where the carriage stopt, there stood an ancient temple, esteemed to be the largest in the whole kingdom, which, having been polluted some years before by an unnatural murder, was according to the zeal of those people looked upon as prophane, and therefore had been applied to common use, and all the ornaments and furniture carried away. In this edifice it was determined I should lodge. The great gate fronting to the north was about four feet high, and almost two feet wide, through which I could easily creep. On each side of the gate was a small window, not above six inches from the ground: into that on the left side the king's smith conveyed fourscore and eleven chains, like those that hang to a lady's watch in Europe, and almost as large, which were locked to my left leg with six and thirty padlocks. Overagainst this temple, on the other side of the great highway, at twenty feet distance, there was a turret at least five feet high. Here the emperor ascended with many principal lords of his court to have an opportunity of viewing me, as I was told, for I could not see them. It was reckoned that above an hundred thousand inhabitants came out of the town upon the same errand; and in spite of my guards, I believe, there could not be fewer than ten thousand at several times, who mounted my body by the help of ladders. But a proclamation was soon issued to forbid it on pain of death. When the Workmen found it was impossible for me to break loose, they cut all the strings that bound me; whereupon I rose up with as melancholy a disposition as ever I had in my life.

But

But the noise and astonishment of the people at seeing me rise and walk are not to be expressed. The chains, that held my left leg, were about two yards long, and gave me not only the liberty of walking backwards and forwards in a semicircle; but, being fixed within four inches of the gate, allowed me to creep in, and lie at my full length in the temple.

CAPT. GULLIVERS ADVENTURES AT THE COURT OF THE KING OF BROBDIGNAC.*)

It is the custom, that every Wednesday (which, as I have before observed, is their Sabbath) the king and queen, with the royal issue of both sexes, dine together in the apartment of his majesty, to whom I was now become a great favourite; and as these times my little chair and table were placed at his left hand before one of the salt-cellars. This prince took a pleasure in conversing with me, enquiring into the manners, religion, laws, government, and learning of Europe; wherein I gave him the best account I was able. His apprehension was so clear, and his judgment so exact, that he made very wise reflections and observations upon all I said. But I confess, that after I had been a little too copious in talking of my own beloved country, of our trade, and wars by sea and land, of our schisms in religion, and parties in the state; the prejudices of his education prevailed so far, that he could not forbear taking me up in his right hand, and stroaking me gently with the other, after an hearty fit of laughing, asked me, whether I was a whig or tory? Then turning to his first minister, who waited behind him with a white staff near as tall as the mainmast of the royal-sovereign, he observed how contemptible a thing was human grandeur, which could be mimicked by such diminutive insects as I: and yet, says he, I dare engage, these creatures have their titles and distinction of honour, they contrive little nests and burrows, that they call houses and cities; they make a figure in dress and equipage; they love, they fight, they dispute, they cheat, they betray. And thus he continued on, while my colour came and went several times with indignation to hear our noble country, the miſtreſs of arts and arms, the ſcourge of France, the arbitreſs of Europe, the ſeat of virtue, piety, honour, and truth, the pride and envy of the world, ſo contemptuouſly treated.

*) Swift's Works Vol. 2.

But as I was not in a condition to reſent injuries, ſo upon mature thoughts I began to doubt whether I was injured or no For, after having been accuſtomed ſeveral months to the ſight and converſe of this people, and obſerved every object upon which I caſt mine eyes to be of proportionable magnitude, the horror I had at firſt conceived from their bulk and aſpect, was ſo far worn off, that if I had then beheld a company of Engliſh lords and ladies in their finery, and birthday cloaths, acting their ſeveral parts in the moſt courtly manner of ſtrutting, and bowing, and prating; to ſay the truth, I ſhould have been ſtrongly tempted to laugh as much at them, as the king and his grandees did at me. Neither indeed could I forbear ſmiling at myſelf, when the queen uſed to place me upon her hand towards a looking glaſs, by which both our perſons appeared before me in full view together; and there could be nothing more ridiculous than the compariſon: ſo that I really began to imagine myſelf dwindled many degrees below my uſual ſize.

Nothing angered and mortified me ſo much as the queen's dwarf, who being of the loweſt ſtature that was ever in that country (for I verily think he was not full thirty feet high) became ſo inſolent at ſeeing a creature ſo much beneath him, that he would always affect to ſwagger and look big as he paſſed by me in the queen's anti-chamber, while I was ſtanding on ſome table talking with the lords or ladies of the court, and he ſeldom failed of a ſmart word or two upon my littleneſs; againſt which I could only revenge myſelf by calling him brother, challenging him to wreſtle, and ſuch repartees as are uſual in the mouths of court pages. One day, at dinner, this malicious little cubb was ſo nettled with ſomething I had ſaid to him, that, raiſing himſelf upon the frame of her majeſty's chair, he took me up by the middle, as I was ſitting down, not thinking any harm, and let me drop into a large ſilver bowl of cream, and then ran away as faſt as he could. I fell over head and ears, and, if I had not been a good ſwimmer, it might have gone very hard with me; for Glumdalclitch in that inſtant happened to be at the other end of the room, and the queen was in ſuch a fright, that ſhe wanted preſence of mind to aſſiſt me. But my little nurſe ran to my relief, and took me out, after I had swallowed above a quart of cream. I was put to bed; however I received no other damage than the loss of a suit of cloaths, which was utterly spoiled. The dwarf was soundly whipped, and as a farther punishment forced to drink up the bowl of cream, into which he had thrown me: neither was he ever restored to favour: for soon after thee queen bestowed him on a lady of high quality, so that I saw him no more, to my very great satisfaction; for I could not tell to what extremity such a malicious urchin might have carried his resentment.

to

He had before served me a scurvy trick, which set the queen a laughing, although at the same time she was heartily vexed, and would have immediately cashiered him, if I had not been so generous as to intercede. Her Majesty had taken a marrow-bone upon her plate, and, after knocking out the marrow, placed the bone again in the dish erect, as it stood before; the dwarf watching his opportunity, while Glumdalclitch was gone to the side-board, mounted the stool that she stood on to take care of me at meals, took me up in both hands, and squeesing my legs together, wedged them into the marrow-bone, above my waist, where I stuck for some time, and made a very ridiculous figure. I believe it was near a minute before any one knew what was become of me; for I thought it below me to cry out. But, as princes seldom get their meat hot, my legs were not scaldet, only my stockings and breeches in a sad condition. The dwarf, at my intreaty, had no other punishment than a sound whipping.

I was frequently rallied by the queen upon account of my fearfulness; and she used to ask me, whether the people of my country were as great cowards as myself? The occasion was this: the kingdom is much pestered with flies in summer; and these odious insects, each of them as big as a Dunstable lark, hardly gave me any rest while I sat at dinner with their continual humming and buzzing about mine ears. They would sometimes alight upon my victuals, and leave their loathsome excrement or spawn behind, which to me was very visible, though not to the natives of that country, whose large optics were not so acute as mine in viewing smaller objects. Sometimes they would fix upon my nose or fore-head, where they stung me to the quick, smelling very offensively; and I could easily trace that viscous matter, which, our naturalists tell us, enables those creatures to walk with their feet upwards up on a cieling. I had much ado to defend myſelf againſt theſe deteſtable animals, and could not forbear ſtarting when they came on my face. It was the common practice of the dwarf to catch a number of theſe inſects in his hand, as ſchoolboys do among us, ant let them out ſuddenly under my noſe, on purpoſe to frighten me, and divert the queen. My remedy was to cut them in pieces with my knife, as they flew in the air, wherein my dexterity was much admired.

I remember, one morning, when Glumdalclitch had ſet me in my box upon a window, as ſhe uſually did in fair days to give me air (for I durſt not venture to let the box be hung on a nail out of the window, as we do with cages in England) after I hat lifted up one of my ſaſhes, and ſat down at my table to eat a piece of ſweet cake for my breakfaſt, above twenty waſps, allured by the ſmell, came flying into the room, humming louder than the drones of as many bag pipes. Some of them ſeized my cake, and carried it piece-meal away; others flew about my head and face, confounding me with the noiſe, and putting me in the utmoſt terror of their ſtings. However I had the courage to riſe and draw my hanger, and attack them in the air. I diſpatched four of them, but the reſt got away, and I preſently ſhut my window. Theſe inſects were as large as partridges; I took out their ſtings, found them an inch and a half long, and as ſharp as needles.

SOME ACCOUNT OF ENGLAND'S TRADE AND COLONIES *)

Before England had foreign Colonies and Factories, our general Commerce was comparatively inconſiderable. The great bulk of our Exportations conſiſted of our Woollen Drapery, Lead, and Tin; in the Times, more eſpecially, before France had ſtruck into the Woollen Manufacture, and Holland but very little; and that Florence and Venice were chiefly confied to the ſupplying the Countries within the Mediterranean therewith. So that, in effect, we enjoyed almoſt

*) A. Anderſon's Hiſtorical and Chronological Deduction of the Origie of Commerce from the narlieſt accounts to the preſent Time. Lond. 1764. 2 Vol. fol.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0298
DFG

almoſt a Monopoly of that Manufacture for the Weſt and North Parts of Europe before the Year 1640; Spain and Portugal being then almoſt intirely ſupplied by us with light Draperies, as well for their home Conſumtion, as for that of their extenſive Colonies; from whence, in Return, we were, in thoſe Days, ſupplied with the Sugars, Tobacco, Drugs &c. which we now have from our own Plantations. For this Reaſon, our old commercial Writers are almoſt wholly taken up with the Importance of our Wool and Wollen Manufactures, which, with our Tin, Lead, Leather, Coals, and ſome other ſmaler Articles, were all we pretended to call our ſtaple Commodities.

With reſpect to our Importations, Venice firſt, and Liſbon next, ſupplied us with the Merchandize of Eaſt-India &c. — The Hanſe-Towns with naval Stores, Copper, Iron, Linen, and even with the beſt of our Shipping. — Germany alſo, with Linen, Tin-plates, and Hardware, even ſo low as to Nails themſelves. — France ſupplied us, in great Abundance, with Silks, Linen, Wines, Brandies, Paper, Toys, and Frippery. How happy then is the Change in our National Circumſtances, ſince we have had American Plantations, the Demand from whence, of all Kinds of Merchandize, having ſo greatly excited our People at home to the Improvement and Increaſe of our old Manufactures, and to the Introduction of new ones? Whereby, and likewiſe by the vaſt Increaſe of the Productions of our American Plantations, we have got rid, for the moſt Part, (though not as yet entirely) of a precarious Dependence on other Nations, for what we now either manufacture much better at home, or elſe are ſupplied with from our own Plantations and foreign Settlements, in exchange for our native Commodities, inſtead of our formerly ſending out much of our Treaſure for the ſame? How greatly are our Cuſtoms thereby increaſed, from 36,000 l. at Queen Elizabeth's Death, to 400,000 l. at the Reſtoration of King Charles II.; and to four times this laſt Sum at the preſent Time? How vaſtly is our great Metropolis increaſed, from little above 200,000 Souls, with all its Suburbs on both Sides the Thames, at the ſaid Queen's Death, to about (or very near) four times as many at preſent?

Our American Plantations, therefore, by the vaſt Increaſe of their People, and of the Commodities by them raiſed for our own Uſe, for our Manufactures and Re-exportations, and more eſpecially by the perpetually increaſing Demands from thence thence of all kinds of our Manufactures, Productions, &c. in immenſe Quantities; (whereby probably about or near a Million of our People are employed at home, many Hundreds of ſtout Ships, and many Thouſands of Mariners, conſtantly employed; much Wealth, and conſiderable Quantities of Bullion of both Gold and Silver, continually brought home to us) do undoubtedly, at preſent more than ever, demand of us the firſt and higheſt Regard, preferably to any other commercial Conſideration whatever: More eſpecially, if we do but duly conſider, that, by the additional Wealth, Power, Territory, and Influence thereby now thrown into our Scale, we are enabled to preſerve our deareſt Independency with regard to the other Potentates of Europe; ſome of whom are, in little more than one Century paſt, ſo increaſed in Power and Territory, as to have long ſince given alarming Apprehenſions to all their Neighbours.

The Commerce we now carry on with our ſaid American Plantations is ſo vaſt, as probably already to equal in Quantity, and to exceed in Profit, all the other Commerce we have with the reſt of the World. And it being inceſſantly increaſing, in proportion to the Increaſe of white People there, they are perpetually increaſing their uſeful Productions, cultivating new Plantations, and ſuccesfully attempting new Materials for Commerce; as Silk, Indico, Coffee, Potaſh, Drugs for Phyſic, Dyers, and Painters, &c. more eſpecially in our fine Continents-Colonies of Carolina and Georgia, which, in the Opinion of very knowing Perſons, are capable, with proper Induſtry, of raiſing the fineſt Productions of all the three Diviſions of the old World, as well as of that of the new one. In Colonel John Purry's Memorial to the Duke of Newcaſtle, then Secretary of State, in the Reign of King George I. and which he afterward printed, Anno 1724, upon his Application for his carrying into Carolina a Colony of Proteſtant Switzers; he lays it down as a Poſtulatum, "That "there is a certain Latitude on our Globe, ſo happily tem- "pered between the Extremes of Heat and Gold, as to be "more peculiarly adapted than any other for all the ſaid rich "productions: and he ſeems, with Judgment, to have fixed "on the Latitude of 33 Degrees, (whether South or North) "being that of Carolina, as the identical one for that peculiar "Character." That ſenſible Man, (a Native of Switzerland) whom the Author of this Work once converſed with, had before printed at London a Memorial, which he had formerly preſented presented to the Directors of the Dutch East-India Company, in the Year 1718, on his Return from their Service in India; wherein he endeavoured to persuade them to plant new Colonies on the Coast of Caffres, (near their Colony at the Cape of Good Hope) and also on the Land of Nuyts, on the Southern hitherto unplanted Continent called New-Holland, not far South from their Island of Java, both lying near the said Latitude of 33 Degrees: "A Latitude," (says he) "most fit "for Vines, and other excellent Fruits and Plants; whereby "the Company would be enabled to supply their East-India "Settlements with Wines, Fruits, Oils, and Corn, which "now cost them so great an Expence bought of and from the "Europeans." But in this Memorial, Purry, it seems, touched on some Points which the Company judged improper to be published, and constrained him to leave Holland. His next application was to the French Ministry, by adapting his Scheme to some of the foreign Settlements of France. But their Reference to the French Academy of Sciences produced the following cold Answer, viz. That they could not judge of Countries which they had never seen! Last of all, he presented the above-named Memorial, Anno 1721; wherein he sets forth, from indisputable Facts. "That the indentical Latitude "of South Carolina, (which then comprehended the Country "since named Georgia) or that of 33 Degrees, either North "or South of the Equator, will ever be found to be productive "of the richest Plants, Fruits, Drugs, &c. of any Part "whatever on the terraqueous Globe, all other Things "being supposed equal, i. e. provided there be no natural "Impediments, such as Rocks, Marshes, sandy Deserts, &c. "A Latitude," (says he) "which, by the Moderation of its "Heat, and Temperature of its Air, sheds Fruitfulness on "the Earth, and Happiness on Mankind in general; who, "the farther they are distant from this Degree, are only so "much the less happy: And that the nearer any Country is "to that Latitude, the more happy is their Situation. Thus "Barbary, Egypt, Syria, Persia, India, China, Japan, "and, in short, all other Countries, are found to excel, in "proportion, the nearer they approach to this Degree of "Latitude. Upon this Principle, Carolina and New-Mexico "on the North Side of the Equator, as Chili and Rio de la Plata "on its South Side, must be Countries preferable to any in "all America, as being all situated about or near the said 33d "Degree. It is," (continued he) "a Consequence that never "fails.

"fails. Thus Andaluſia is the beſt of all the Provinces of "Spain, as coming nearer to our 33d Degree: So are, for "the ſame Reaſon, Languedoc and Provence the beſt in France, "and Naples and Sicily of all the Italian Dominions." He next ſhews, "That Carolina is proper for producing the beſt Silk "in the World, as being fitter for the breeding of Silk-worms, "than either France, Spain, or Italy; as it is alſo for Wines, "Oils, Cotton, Indico, Wax, Fruits, Cocoonuts, Timber, "Tar, Flax, Hemp, Rice, Wheat, &c." The Prefacer of the Engliſh Tranſlation of the ſaid Memorial alledges, that our great Sir Iſaac Newton did, in general, agree to the Principles of this ſame opinion.

What he then foretold concerning Silk and Indico, has ſince been verified abundantly already in Carolina; as have alſo been the excellent Productions of the Wines and Fruits ſince raiſed on the Coaſt of Caffres, under the Dutch Government of the Cape of Good Hope. Rice was a little before begun to be raiſed in Carolina; and has ſince been ſo far increaſed as to have produced, in ſome Years, from 80,000 to 104,000 Barrels for Exportation; in ſo much, that it grew to be more than could be vended to Advantage; which, it ſeems, was one Occaſion of their falling into Indico, now alſo brought to a great Degree of Perfection. The Production of Rice at Carolina was as accidental as was that of Sugar long before at Barbadoes, (of which in its Place) and therefore deſerves likewiſe to be commemorated for the Encouragement of ſuch-like future Attempts. It ſeems, the Captains of a Ship from Madagaſcar, touching at Carolina, in the Reign of the late Queen Anne, left, with a Planter there, a ſmall Bag, not exceeding a Peck of Seed-Rice, by way of Experiment: And, ſoon after, Mr Du Bois, then Treaſurer of our Eaſt-India Company, ſent thither from hence, for the like Experiment a Bag of another Sort of Seed-Rice: And, after ſeveral Trials of both thoſe Sorts, the Planters at length found out the true Method of cultivating and dreſſing them to perfection. Their Silk (though more ſlowly), increaſes in Quantity every Year, and is in Quality, on the ſtricteſt Examination, found to be excellent. Their Pitch and Tar are not hitherto quite ſo good as what is brought from Sweden; yet, by a farther Continuance of the Bounties thereon, and on ſome other new Productions, they may probably be brought to Perfection in a reaſonable Time.

The

The ſaid Colonel Purry, ſome Years after, ſettled, with a Colony of his Country-people, on the River Savannah, which parts Carolina from Georgia; where he has perpetuated his Name, by founding the Town of Purryſhburg, in which the Poſterity of thoſe Proteſtant Switzers remain at this Time.

Our Planters in thoſe and our other Colonies are ſaid to be diligent in procuring and tranſplaeting, from Italy, Barbary, Syria, Arabia, Perſia, and other Eaſtern Parts, many Kinds of new Seeds, Plants, and Roots: In Carolina and Virginia, they have found ſeveral exellent originally-native Productions, ſuch as Snake-root, Saſſafras, and, of late Years, alſo the famous Root called Genſeng, ſo highly celebrated in China.

In Carolina, too, they have now got Plenty of Lemons and Oranges, which are ſaid to ſurpaſs any growing in Europe. And the late judicious Mr. Joſhua Gee, in his ſmall but excellent Treatiſe, publiſhed Anno 1729, (intitled, The Trade and Navigation of Great Britain conſidered,) aſſures us, that the Hemp of Virginia has, upon Trial, been found equal, in Goodneſs and Strength, to that of Ancona in Italy, allowed to exceed any other Hemp in Europe.

The fine Provinces of Virginia and Maryland produce the beſt Tobacco in the World for general Uſe, of which, it is ſaid, above the Value of 600,000 l. Sterling is yearly brought to Europe, in near 300 Sail of our own Shipping, bringing in a Revenue of about or near 200,000 l. by the Cuſtoms on it. About three Fourths of which Tobacco is annually re-exported to other European Countries. Iron, alſo, is now brought thence in conſiderable Quantities; whereby, in Time, we may ſave above 200,000 l. in ready Money annually ſent to Sweden, for what we may have from our own Fellow-Subjects, in exchang for Britiſh Manufactures, which Sweden neither will nor can take of us. For, ſince we have not Cord-wood in Englaud, either at a reaſonable Price, or in a ſufficient Quantity, for refining (as it is ſaid) above one third Part of the Iron we uſe, and as Sweden may ſome time or other take the like unreaſonable Advantage of us in this Commodity, as they did in the Article of Tar, Anno 1703, it is therefore ſurely the higheſt Wiſdom, to have all ſuch Commodities intirely from our own Colonies. "It is almoſt impoſ-"ſible„ (ſays the ſaid ingenious Mr. Gee) "to find out five "ſuch neceſſary Articles as Hemp, Flax, Silk, Iron and "Potaſh, for carrying on the Manufactures of this Kingdom,

„ that

"that can be done with so little Trouble. — Money ought "to be advanced by the Nation, for the Propagation of such "useful Materials. — And, if they come to be raised in "sufficient Quantities in our plantations, there needs not to "be one idle Person in Great Britain and Ireland; though, it "is said, there is now near one Million idle, of one Sort or "other. — Not one fourth Part„ (continues he) "of the "Product of our Plantations redounds to the Profit of the "Planters themselves: For, out of all that comes hither, "they only carry back Cloathing and other Accommodations "for their Families, all of the Manufacture or Merchandize "of this Kingdom; and, if they have any Thing to spare, it "is laid up here; and their Children are sent hither for "Education. — There are very few trading or manufacturing "Towns in the Kingdom, but have some Dependence on the "Plantation-trade.„ — Mr. Gee also thought, "That Tea, "Coffee, and Cochineal might be produced in Carolina;„ (see the Premiums of the truly honourable Society for the encouraging of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, Annis 1759, 1760, and 1761, "which with wild Olive-trees, "Rosin, Turpentine, Iron-stone, Boards, Lumber, Pipestaves, "Masts, Yards, Hides, Tallow, Furs, Beef, Pork, Butter, "Cheese, Buck-weath, Oats, Barley, and the other before-"named Productions of our several Colonies, is such a Catalogue "of most excellent and useful Merchandize as cannot easily "be matched in any cultivated Country of Christendom. By "all which Means together, we might save above two Millions "annually, which we now pay to foreign Nations, and to "our own (unemployed) Poor.„

Our American Fellow-subjects are at length become an immense Market for our Woollen, Silk, Linen, and Metallic Manufactures; — for Household-furniture of all Sorts, Apparel, Plate, Pictures, Jewels, Books, Armory, Medicines, some Materials for Building, Toys, and other Curiosities.

All which Benefits are greatly enhanced to us, by this most important Consideration, viz. That the Trade with them is not like those carried on with foreign Nations, which undoubtedly may, from various Causes, be utterly lost or quite averted: But our said Fellow-subjects of America do not only look upon Britain as their Mother-country, but are moreover absolutely restrained by Law from admitting the Ships of foreign Nations into their Ports, (Stress of weather excepted)

and

and also from taking off any foreign Product or Manufactures; some few stipulated and limited Cases excepted.

The sagacious Sir Josiah Child, many Years since, observed, that every white Man in our said Colonies finds Employment for four times as many at home. Now, supposing that, since his Time, there may be 250,000 white Men in all our Colonies, (exclusive of Women and Children, and also of Negro-Slaves, and including about 12,000 Sailors, employed as well in their own Fisheries as in the coasting Trade, and in that also between the continent and Island-Colonies, in 2000 Vessels of their own, great and small) then is Employment given to no fewer than One Million of our own People at home. And, as all our Commerce with America, (including the Negro-Trade) may probably employ 1200 Sail more of our own British Shipping, and 30,000 Sailors, it is easy to conceive how vastly profitable our said Plantations are to us in every View; whether by setting on Work such immense Numbers of our Manufacturers and Artificers of all Kinds, or of Employment of our Sailors, Ship-builders, and all the Trades depending thereon. How tenacious, then, ought we ever to be for the Preservation of every Foot of Ground of such invaluable Possessions? Yet how supine and negligent have we too often formerly been in asserting and supporting our just Claims in that Part of the World? Did not the late Captain Thomas Coram, (though a plain Man) in the Year 1735, in a Memorial and Petition to the Privy Council, clearly (though in his blunt Manner) represent the then unsettled and very hazardous Condition of Nova Scotia, and its imminent Danger from the French? which, however, was disregarded, till after the Peace of Aix la Chapelle, when his Plan was pursued; by which Delay, our Enemies had so many more Years of Leisure to make farther Encroachments on a Province, since universally allowed to be the important Key of all North America, not by its Fertility, but Situation; and how much Blood and Treasure has that fatal Neglect since cost us!

Had not a Number of private Gentlemen, in the Year 1732, (joined by some noble Persons) most disinterestedly undertaken to ascertain and set out the just South Boundaries of Carolina, by soliciting a Charter for appointing them Trustees for planting the new Colony of Georgia, on the South Extremity of that Province; who can say; (or rather who can doubt) whether either Spain from Florida or France from Mississippi, might not, before tis Time, have planted and fortified where at preſent the Britiſh Enſigns are diſplayed.

How watchful ought we alſo to be of our Iſland of Newfoundland? For, although, through its natural and incurable Sterility, it is not like ever to be rendered conſiderable merely as a Plantation; yet, for the Sake of its good Ports, and of our great Fiſhery on its Banks, valued at 300,000 l. Sterling, added annually to the national Balance or Stock in our Favour, it is of very great and univerſally-acknowledged Importance to us.

The ſame might have been ſaid of the vaſt Countries within the Streight and Bay of Hudſon, before we were poſſeſſed of Canada, where, although (for the like Reaſon) Plantations may probably never take place, it is nevertheleſs undoubtedly our ſolid Intereſt, notwithſtanding our now ſtipulated Poſſeſſions of Canada, the beſt Part of Louiſiana, and all the Country of Florida, to protect our Company's Forts, and their Trade and Boundaries; whither, too, in the Opinion of ſome intelligent People, a more extenſive Commerce with the Savages might be carried on with our coarſer Woollen, Metallic, and Linen Manufactures, &c. in exchange for their Furs, Peltry, Bed-feathers, Whale-bone, and Oil; and that poſſibly thrice the preſent Company's capital Stock of little more than 100,000 l. might be thereby employed, and perhaps four times the Number of Ships now annually ſent thither, (being at moſt but four Ships hitherto;) were another Company to make up a proportionable Capital, with the Sanction of an Act of Parliament, and a Royal Charter, which, doubtleſs, his Majeſty, for the Benefit of Commerce, would be graciouſly pleaſed to grant: For the preſent Hudſon's-Bay Company is not an excluſive one. Yet as this Company's Forts (ſuch as they are) were erected at their own Expence, they have an undoubted Right to exclude all others from taking the Benefit of their Protection, without their Leave firſt obtained: Wherefore, ſuch propoſed new Company might erect Forts of their own, in other Parts of the widely-extended Countries round that vaſt Bay, and might trade with the Savages thereof, without interfering with the preſent Company; or elſe might be enabled, for a valuable Conſideration, to purchaſe, and take under its Management, all the preſent Company's Forts, and alſo to erect additional ones in other Parts; which by a ſmall Duty on that Commerce, might well be ſupported, for all his Majeſty's Subjects freely to traffick in in that Bay, and up into the adjoining inland Parts; private or ſeparate Traders being univerſally known to take more Pains, and to manage more frugally, than Companies can or will ever be able to do!

Such ſeparate Traders, too, in trading far up into the Country Weſtward, might poſſibly be more likely to find the ſo much and ſo long ſought-for North-weſt Paſſage to China and Japan, that the Company is ever like to do. But of that ſuppoſed Paſſage more will be ſaid in its hiſtorical Places. Yet we may here note, that our late kind Neighbours the French of Canada have formerly encroached on our undoubted Boundaries, by advancing their Frontier-Forts too near to ours on the South Boundaries of the Hudſon's Bay Countries, contrary to the Limits ſettled (though too careleſly) in conſequence of the Treaty of Utrecht; which Boundaries, it is to be hoped, there will not now be any more Occaſion exactly to aſcertain.

The Bermudas or Sommers Iſles, are ſome of our earlieſt Poſſeſſions in the Weſtern Seas, far removed from any Continent or Iſland: They ſcarcely contain above 20,000 Acres of good Land, now almoſt worn out; which maintains about 5000 white People, and ſome Negroes. They have little or nothing of their own Product to export, excepting their fine and ſtrong Cedar-wood, of which they build good Brigantines and light Sloops, to be employed between North America and our Sugar-Iſlands; to both which Countries they are certainly uſeful, though in other Reſpects of but ſmall advantage to their Mother-Country, any farther than our ſupplying them with what Manufactures, &c. they want, which ſo far is profitable to us, as we take little or nothing from them but what they pick up among our Sugar Iſlands. Yet as it would be very dangerous to Britain for any other Nation to poſſeſs them, it is therefore doubtleſs our Intereſt to protect them, and to grant them any reaſonable Encouragement.

Britain claims all the Bahama Iſles, ſaid by ſome to be 500 in Number, though many of them are no other than mere Rocks; and although others of them be large and fruitful, yet they are almoſt all uninhabited by us, except the Iſle of Providence, where we have two Forts, which our Nation finds their Account in ſupporting, as they prove a Curb to Pyrates in time of Peace, and commodious in time of War, on account of Prizes brought in thither. It has, however, very little of Product for Exportation, except some Ambergris, certain fine Timbers, Oranges, and some other Fruits, for the Use of our Continent-Colonies. And, to say the Truth, its greatest Value to us is its Situation, and that it would be dangerous to be in any other Nation's Hands.

We cannot quite leave the Subject of our Continent-Colonies in America, without making some farther Observations of their Benefits and importance to the British Empire. The newly-replanted Colony of Nova Scotia's great Importance consists: I*st*, In its being a Barrier to New-England, by its happy Situation; it is now well understood to be not only a Bridle against Canada, (if ever that should again become French) but may also in effect be said to be a Curb on all other Nations sailing in those Seas. II*dly*, It is also very happily situated for the Fishery. III*dly*, it is extremely happy for us, that it is so well stocked with Timber, Masts, &c. for the Use of the Royal Navy, more especially as it becomes every Year more difficult to be supplied therewith from elsewhere.

The four Provinces of New-England, more especially those of the Massachusets-Bay and Connecticut, are of great Benefit to their Mother Country, by their hitherto supplying Masts, Yards, &c. for the Royal Dock-yards, and Timber for the building of many good Merchant Ships.

New-York, Pensylvania, and New-Jersey may be said to be long since become indispensably necessary to the very Existence of our Sugar-Colonies, by the supplying of our said Islands with salted Flesh and Fish, Flour, Biscuit; Pease, and Indian Corn, and House-Timber, and with Horses for their Sugar-Mills, and also Pipe-staves, Lumber, &c. for that End. For all which, the Islanders pay them in Sugar, Molasses, Rum, and Spanish Coin; with which, again, those Continent Colonies pay Great Britain and Ireland for every Thing they want from us, and with what they get from the French, Dutch, and Spanish Colonies, as also with what they get from Portugal, Spain, Italy, (and sometimes as far as from the Levant) whom they supply (in their own Shipping) with Fish caught in the American Seas, and occasionally likewise with their Corn.

The two first named Provinces, indeed, are properly Corn Colonies, and have already testified the great Benefit they may be of, by having sometimes seasonably supplied Britain itself with Corn in a Scarcity; and, by their future Increase, may may hereafter be much more so. Which happy Circumstance is hitherto peculiar to us; there being as yet no other European Nation whatever, that has Colonies in America capable of supplying their Mother-Country with the Corn, and other excellent Provisions, which ours, in case of Necessity, can do, as well as with naval Stores; with which last-named great Article, it is now earnestly to be hoped, we shall, by all possible Means, endeavour to supply ourselves intirely from them, and our vast new Acquisitions on the same Continent of America, and thereby save the immense Sums hitherto paid to the Danes, Swedes, Poles, and Russians.

What has been already noted of the product and great Benefits of the Provinces of Virginia and Maryland is sufficient to illustrate their vast Importance; and, particularly, the very great Employment they give to our Ships, Mariners, and Manufacturers, and to almost all other Branches of Business.

Since seven undivided Eighth Parts of North and South Carolina were made regal Governments, (Anno 1728) they have prospered exceedingly; more especially South Carolina; for whose Exports, so long ago as the Year 1753, we are indebted to a Treatise, in two Octavo Volumes, on our American Colonies, published Anno 1757, as follows, viz.

Rice	104,682 Barrels.
Pitch	5,869 ——
Tar	2,943 ——
Turpentine	759 ——
Beef	416 ——
Pork	1,560 ——
Deer-Skins	460 Hogsheads.
Tanned Leather	4,196 Hides.
Hides in the Hair	1,200 ——
Indian Corn	16,428 Bushels.
Pease	9,112 ——
Shingles	1,114,000 in Number.
Cask Staves	206,000 ——
Lumber	395,000 Feet.
Indico (Anno 1753)	210,924 ℔ Weight.
Ditto, (Anno 1756) about	500,000 ——

Beside a great Number of Live Cattle and Horses; also Cedar-Wood, Cypress, Walnut-Plank, Bees-Wax, Myrtle, some Raw Silk, and Cotton.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0309
DFG

North Carolina exported, Anno 1753.

Tar — — —	61,525	Barrels.
Pitch — — —	12,055	——
Turpentine — —	10,429	——
Indian Corn — —	61,580	Buſhels.
Peaſe, about — —	10,000	——
Pork, and Beef — —	3,300	Barrels.
Tobacco, about — —	100	Hogſheads.
Shingles — — —	2,500,000	in Number.
Lumber — — —	2,000,647	Feet.
Deer Skins, about —	30,000
Tanned Leather, about —	1,000	Cwt.

Beſide much Wheat, Rice, Bread, Potatoes, Wax, Tallow-Candles, Bacon, Timber, ſome Cotton, Indico, and Furs.

Laſtly, Georgia, though ſtill but thinly inhabited, begins to raiſe ſome Rice, Indico and Raw Silk, and to export ſome Corn and Lumber to the Weſt Indies. They have alſo ſome Trade with the Indians for Peltry: All which will naturally increaſe with the Increaſe of their Planters. Theſe are very comfortable Accounts for our Nation, even at preſent, and afford a moſt promiſing Proſpect for future Generations.

With reſpect to our Weſt-India, or Sugar Iſles, notwithſtanding the ſmall Number of their white People, compared to thoſe in our Continent Colonies, we muſt admit them to be extremely beneficial to us, not only as having from us alone every Kind of Manufacture, &c. which they and their much more numerous Negroes need, but likewiſe on account of the vaſt Quantity of the very rich Returns they make us in Sugars, Rum, Molaſſes, Cotton, Ginger, Pimento, Coffee, Drugs of ſundry Kinds, and Mahogony-Timber; thereby greatly augmenting his Majeſty's Cuſtoms, and employing great Numbers of our Ships, Mariners, Manufacturers, &c.

Some have made the annual Value of all the ſaid imported Sugars, &c. from thoſe Iſles, to amount to no leſs than 1,300,000 l. Sterling; and that (till the French ſupplanted us in the Re-exportation of our Sugars) we annually re-exported one third Part thereof. But the Exactneſs of this Computation cannot be abſolutely depended on.

Since the Uſe of Tea, Coffee, Chocolate and Punch, and that Made-Wines (or Sweets) have become ſo general almoſt all over Europe, the Conſumption of Sugar has ſo greatly increaſed, increaſed, that it is at this Day one of the greateſt mercantile Articles in Commerce. Sugar has been in great Eſtimation in Europe, even long before America was diſcovered, though in old Times much ſcarcer and dearer than at preſent. As far as appears, none of it was found, or at leaſt known, in America, till tranſplanted thither by the Europeans. Its Origin was from the inland Continent of Aſia, very probably as far eaſt as China, where it ſtill greatly abounds. It was from that Continent firſt tranſplanted to Cyprus, and thence (according to various Authors) into Sicily, where no Foot-ſteps of it now remain; thence it was tranſplanted to the Madeira and Canary Iſles, and from the latter, by Portugal, into Braſil: Though others think, that the Portugueſe, (before they diſcovered, or at leaſt planted in Braſil) being in Poſſeſſion of the Coaſt of Angola in Africa, where the Sugar Cane was found ſpontaneouſly to grow, firſt tranſplanted it from Angola to Braſil. From Braſil it was tranſplanted (as we ſhall ſee) firſt to our Iſle of Barbadoes, and thence to our other Weſt-India Iſles, as from Braſil alſo it was carried to the Spaniſh Weſt-India Iſles, and alſo to the Spaniſh Dominions in Mexico, Peru and Chili; and laſtly, to the French, Dutch and Daniſh Colonies. More of the Hiſtory and Tranſplantations of this moſt univerſal Merchandize will be found in the Progreſs of our Work.

Some think, that all our annual Exports to America do amount to above a Million in Value; which may be probable enough, if what Dr. William Clark of Boſton in New-England affirms be true, in his judicious Obſervations on the Conduct of the French, and their Incroachments on our American Colonies, (Boſton printed, London reprinted, Anno 1755) viz. "That our annual Exports to New-England alone, "amount to 400,000 l. Sterling. — And that near Half "the Shipping of Great Britain is employed in the Commerce "carried on with her American Plantations: Which Trade "a lone (he juſtly adds) will, in Time, employ a much "greater Quantity of Shipping than all the preſent Shipping of "Britain. Beſide, that this Trade will enable her wich greater "Advantage to extend her Commerce with other Countries." Our annual Imports from all our American Plantations are conjecturd to amount to near thrice the Value of our ſaid Exports, which (contrary to the Nature of our Imports from foreign Nations) conſtitutes a real Balance in our Favour at Home, of probably near two Millions Sterling yearly; and our great Re-exportations of our Plantation Goods to foreign Parts, viz. of Tobacco, Rice, Sugar, Peltry, &c. is one very great (if not the greateſt) Means of bringing the general annual Balance of Trade to be ſo much in our Favour.

For a conſiderable Time after our firſt planting in America, the Undertakers at Home were much diſcouraged, being great Loſers by their yearly Embarkations thither, as appears by the Hiſtories of Virginia, Barbadoes, Bermudas, &c. which, were indeed, for a long Time, mere unprofitable Drains of our People and Subſtance, until, by patience and Perſeverance, they had cleared and planted thoſe Countries, when they gradually became, as above, a real and great Benefit, and the Means of employing, increaſing and enriching their Fellow-ſubjects at home! Inſomuch, that, if for our Sins, any great Calamity ſhould befall us at Home, we may then bleſs God that we have another vaſtly more extenſive Empire to retire to, where our Kindred and Fellow-ſubjects have paved the Way for the comfortable Settlement of many more Millions of People than the whole Britiſh Empire now contains. Neither can it be juſtly ſaid to be carrying our Conjectures too far, to obſerve, that a Time may come when our Continent Colonies may (by due Encouragement) prove ſo potent and populous, as to be well able to ſuccour their Mother-Country, both with Troops and Shipping, in Caſe of an unequal War with our Enemies, even in Europe itſelf, as indeed they very lately and ſucceſsfully have ſuccurred us againſt Encroachments in America. A Time too, we hope, is ſtill more likely to come, and leſs remote, when we ſhall no longer depend on the northern Nations of Europe, for even any Part of our Naval Stores, — on Italy and Turkey for Raw Silk, Oils, &c. — on Ruſſia for Pot-aſh, Hemp, Flax. &c. — nor perhaps on any other European Country, for Wines, Drugs, or dried Fruits.

In the mean Time, let us ſummarily take a View of the preſent Strength of our Colonies, in Point of the Numbers of their white People, as we find them in Dr. William Douglas's Account of New-England, Anno 1751, and it that of the anonymous Author of an Account of the European Settlements in America, publiſhed for Mr. Dodſley, Anno 1757, in two Octavo Volumes, viz.

New-England's

	White People.
New-England's four proper Provinces, contain	354,000
Pensylvania, (the youngest Colony but Georgia and Nova Scotia) above —	250,000
New-York — —	80,000
Virginia, (the oldest English Colony on the Continent) — —	70,000
New Jersey, (much improved since become a Regal Colony) — —	60,000
Maryland, — —	40,000
And, although those Authors have omitted the Numbers in the now flourishing Provinces of South and North Carolina, and in Georgia, we shall suppose all the three to contain (viz. North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia) at least	60,000
Total white People on the Continent, —	914,000
Nova Scotia (though not computed may contain about — —	30,000
And then the Total will be about —	944,000

There is no Colony nor Plantation in Hudson's Bay and only a few Men in their four small ports, remaining there for keeping the Company's Goods, &c. during the Winter Season.

Others, more sanguinely, will needs have all our Continent Colonies to contain about 1,100,000 white Inhabitants, exclusive of our new, and very important Acquisition of Canada, which gives us Possession of the entire Trade of the very valuable Furs and Peltry of that vast Continent, which may possibly also contain at least 40,000 white Canadians or French Inhabitants; and of Florida, and a great Part of Louisiana.

In our West India, or Sugar Isles, the white People are thus computed, (viz. according to the abovequoted anonymous Author.)

Jamaica, about (though some Accounts make them fewer than) — —	20,000
Barbadoes — —	25,000
St. Christophers, about —	9,000
Antigua, — —	7,000
Nevis, — —	5,000
Montserrat, — —	5,000
Total Whites in the Sugar Isles,	71,000

Brought over	71,000
A number (doubtleſs) noway proportioned to the Number of their Negroes, the latter being generally thirteen or fourteen to one white Perſon, or, as others, about ſixteen to one white Man
Bermudas, —— ——	5,000

Total white Perſons in all our American Iſles, 76,000

Barbuda (though amongſt the Sugar Iſles) has no direct Trade with Britain, being purely employed in Huſbandry, and for raiſing of ſome freſh Proviſions for the other Colonies. Providence is the only Iſland of all the Bahamas which is conſiderably inhabited, upon which, however, (beſide the two ſmall Garriſons) we have but very few white People. And of Newfoundland the like may be ſaid. As for our new Acquiſitions of the Iſles of Grenada, the Grenadines, Tabago. St. Vincent, and Dominico, we have good Ground to hope they will all be ſoon planted and cultivated, and will become very uſeful Sugar Iſlands.

It is much wiſhed by ſome, that Means could be found (without endangering our Sovereignty in America, and alſo without injuring private Property and Liberty) for uniting all the Continent Colonies into one Kind of Government or Conſtitution, ſo as the public Exigencies (in Time of common Danger) might be more effectually ſupplied than hithero has been the Caſe; they being at preſent extremely various in their internal State. Firſt, Some (for Inſtance) are entirely regal Governments, as Georgia, South and North-Carolina, Virginia, New-York, New-Hampſhire, (being part of what is uſually called New-England) and laſtly, Nova-Scotia; in all which Provinces, both the Government, and alſo the Property of the Lands, or Dominium directum, (i. e. of the Quit-rents) are in the Crown, excepting Earl Granville's undivided eighth Part of Carolina, and Lord Fairfax's North-Creek Diſtrict in Virginia. Secondly, In others viz. in Maryland and Penſylvania, both the Government and Property of the Lands are in the original Grantees from the Crown, called Lords-Proprietors, who are, the Lord Baltimore for the firſt-named Province, and the Deſcendents of William Penn, Eſq. for the latter. Thirdly, In Connecticut and Rhode Iſland, (two other of the New-England Provinces) both the Government and Property (i. e. the Quit-rents) are in the Repreſentatives of the People. Fourthly, In the beſt peopled and beſt cultivated Province Province of the Massachusets Bay (more peculiarly called New England) the Government is in the Crown, but the Property (i. e. the Quit-rents) in the Representatives of the People, Lastly, In New-Jersey, the Government is now also in the Crown, althoug the Property, (i. e. the Quit-rents) remains still in a certain select Body of Proprietors.

Were all these thirteen Provinces uniformly joined under the Crown, (consistently with Safety, and the retaining their absolute Dependence on their Mother Country) they might undoubtedly be rendered much more powerful, and also more beneficial to us than they have hitherto been, consisting of no fewer than about a Million of white People, and perhaps of near half a Million of Negroes and dependent Indians; a Number of Subjects superior to that of some entire Kingdoms in Europe; possessed too of a Territory extended in Length for at least 1,500 Miles (Florida included) along the Deucaledonian Ocean, from South-west to North-east, and which, by good Management, might before now have been extended and planted more than perhaps half as many Miles in Breadth, backward towards the South or Indian Ocean, instead of suffering themselves to be barbarously outraged and ravaged by a Handful of closely-united Enemies. All which is, and must be solely submitted to those in whose Power alone it is to rectify, as far as is possible, whatever has been thus formerly so supinely neglected.

Of all the Follies that any Nation can be guilty of in her Colonies, that of even the least Degree of Restraint (and much more of persecution, for mere religious Differences) is the most destructive to their Prosperity, more especially in such Colonies as ours mostly are, on the Continent, consisting of Persons of all Persuasion of Protestants, who all undoubtedly have an equal and natural Right peaceably to profess what they like best, and freely and openly to enjoy their own Ministry and Modes of Worship: But, with respect to Roman Catholics, who have a foreign Head, and often foreign Heards and Inclinations, it were much better they were not at all tolerated there, more especially considering the near Neighbourhood of the French and Spanish busy Missionaries.

With Russia, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Prussia, and most of the Hanse-Towns on the Baltic, whe have undoubtedly a losing Trade; that is to say, the Balance is against us some hundred thousand Pounds yearly; yet from those Parts we must still continue to be supplied with immense Quantities of

Naval

Naval Stores, Ship and Houſe Timber, Pipe-Staves, Copper, Hemp, Flax and their Seeds, Iron, Potaſh, &c. until we become wiſe and happy enough to be ſupplied with every one of theſe Articles from our own American Colonies; for although the ſaid northern People cannot take off an equal Value of our Britiſh Product and Manufactures, we muſt nevertheleſs ſit down contented with a Trade, which, as we are at preſent circumſtanced, they know we cannot diſpenſe with; moſt of the before-named Articles being abſolutely needful, either for our Navy-Royal, or for our mercantile Shipping, Manufactures, &c.

As for others of the Hanſeatic Ports, as Hamburgh, Bremen, Dantzic, &c. they, it is true, take off great Quantities of our Woollen Manufactures, Plantation and Eaſt-India Goods, (more eſpecially Hamburgh) wherewith they ſupply a great Part of Germany and Poland, yet, on the other Hand, we take off immenſe Quantities of their low-priced Linen of various Sorts, ſuited for our Plantation and African Trades, &c. until ſuch Time as our People of Scotland and Ireland ſhall be able fully to ſupply us therewith; they alſo ſupply us with Oak-Timber, Pipe-Staves, Battery, &c. It is therefore much to be apprehended, that we are are ſtill indebted to them for an annual Balance, though, it is to be hoped, not a very conſiderable one.

But with reſpect to our Trade to the Ports of Ruſſia, it is beyond all Queſtion, that the Balance is ſome hundred thouſand Pounds annually againſt us, for their Naval Stores, Linen, and Linen-Yarn, Flax, Hemp, and their Seeds, Drugs, Bees-wax, Timber, Ruſſia Leather, and ſometimes Raw Silk from Perſia when in a peaceable State, &c. which we take of them in great Quantities, over and above all the Value of the Woollen Goods, American and Eaſt-India Merchandize, Watches, Jewels, wrought Plate, Houſhold Furniture, Hard-ware, and many other Things, which we ſupply them with. Inſtead of our taking off ſuch great Quantities of Linen Yarn, ſpun in Ruſſia, Poland, and Germany, (where Labour is ſaid to be performed ſo cheap as 3 Pence per Day) would it not be extremely right in our Legiſlature, as much as poſſible to encourage the ſpinning of it in Britain and Ireland? As the dreſſing and ſpinning of the Flax gives Foreigners too much of the Manufacture; it is farther to be conſidered, that the raw Flax would be imported in our own Shipping; whereas the greateſt Part of their Linen-Yarn is ſaid to be imported in foreign Bottoms; whereby we evidently lye under two very conſiderable Diſadvantages.

to

Although the ten Provinces, uſually ſtiled the Auſtrian Netherlands, have a much better Country than thoſe of Holland; yet, they are moſt probably never like to recover their ancient Commerce, whilſt the ſeven United Provinces can preſerve their Independency: The former, therefore, muſt be content with what Share they have left of the Woollen and Linen Trade, and in the Lace and Cambrick Manufactures, Rheniſh Wines, &c. in moſt of which Britain deals very conſiderably with them; although (in all but the Wines) we hope in Time to be compleatly ſupplied from Scotland and Ireland. At preſent our Trade thither, and eſpecially to French Flanders, is a loſing one to us, though perhaps too much exaggerated by thoſe who make the Balance to be two Millions Sterling yearly againſt us, by their not taking off any proportionable Quantities of our Manufactures Eaſt-India and Plantation Goods, with which Merchandize they are moſtly ſupplied by France.

With Portugal, Great Britain undoubtedly carries on a very advantageous Commerce, by ſupplying not only that Kingdom with great Quantities of Woollen-Goods, Hard-ware, Linen, Glaſs-ware, Lead, Tin, Corn, and many other Things, for their Home Uſe, but alſo with greater Quantities of ſlight Woollen and Linen Goods, for their foreign Plantations: Yet, as France has of late Years very much encroached on us in the Trade to Portugal, with their ſlight Woollen, Silk, and Linen Stuffs, &c. and as, moreover, we take off ſuch vaſt Quantities of their Wines and Fruits, more than any other Nation, or indeed than all the other Nations in Europe could or would conſume, the Balance in our Favour is not (by many knowing Perſons) thought ſo conſiderable as it has formerly been.

The ſame, in a great Meaſure, may, we apprehend, be pronunced concerning our Trade to Spain, France having greatly encroached on us there, and is daily getting Ground of us with her Woollen, Gold and Silber Lace, Silk, Linen, and other Manufactures: although nothing can be clearer, than that it is much more the Intereſt of both Spain and Portugal to encourage us rather than France, ſince we take off much more of their Wines, Fruits, Drugs, Oils, &c. than France has, or can poſſibly have Need of; which laſt-named Kingdom takes none of their Wines: Inſomuch, that probably

France,

France, gains a greater Balance from both those Kingdoms than we do; although it must, however, be acknowledged, that our Trade with Spain is still a gainful one to us.

As none of the States and Cities of Italy and Sicily have any Plantations or Dominions without the Bound of the Mediterranean Sea, we (as well as France and Holland) supply them with many Articles from the American Plantations, and from East-India, as well as with Woollen and Metallic, &c. Manufactures, Tin, Lead, Fish, Corn, &c. On the other Hand, we take of them fine Velvets and Brocades, fine Genoa Paper, Florence and other Wines, Oils, Raw and Thrown Silk, Drugs, Fruits, &c. all or most of them in considerable Quantities, so that perhaps it is not very easy to determine on which Side the Balance lies. Yet, as we trade thither almost entirely in our own Shipping, and as many of the most considerable Articles we have from thence are absolutely necessary for the compleating of our own Manufactures, we must therefore allow the Trade to Italy and Sicily to be, upon the whole, a beneficial one to us.

Although our general and declared Intention in this Work be limited mostly to the Commercial Affairs of Christendom alone, excepting what relates to our Turkey or Levant Company, we may, however, here briefly and properly remark, that, notwithstanding the Grand Seignior's vast Dominions do extend to and comprehend many of the finest Countries upon Earth, and wich are excellently well adapted to Commerce and Manufactures, viz. ancient Greece, almost all the Countries round the Shores of the Black Sea, Lesser Asia, Syria, Arabia, Egypt, and Barca; yet the Turks have very little Commerce but what is intirely passive, brought to their Ports by the Shipping of Christendom; which bring back from thence sundry excellent raw Materials for Commerce, viz. Raw-silk, Grogram Yarn, Galls, and other Dying-Drugs &c. as also Medicinal-Drugs, Coffee, Carpets, &c. in which Trade we, the Dutch, and the Venetians, have still a considerable Share; although the French from Marseilles have greatly gained Ground on us, and all others, of late Years, in that Trade, by the vast Quantities of their fine Woollen Cloths, Stuffs, &c. and their American and East-India Goods, carried to Constantinople, Smyrna, Aleppo, Alexandria, and other Ports. We, however, still carry on a considerable Trade thither, both with respect to the before-named exported, imported, and other Merchandize: And although, although, by the immenſe Quantities of Raw-ſilk, &c. which we import from Turkey, the Balance may be probably, in a literal Senſe, againſt us, yet the greateſt Part of our ſaid Imports being employed in our own Silk &c. Manufactures, we can by no Means (upon the whole) call the Turkey Trade an unprofitable one to Great Britain.

The Barbary Turks (or rather Moors) are as little addicted to Commerce as the Levantine Turks: And as, whilſt we retain our Superiority on the Mediterranean Seas, we ſhall generally be able to compel all the Barbary piratical States to be at Peace with us; it is, therefore, evidently advantageous to us, that they remain, as at preſent, at War with other Chriſtian Powers, whereby we not only undiſturbedly carry on our own Commerce in thoſe Seas, but are moreover become, in ſome Meaſure, the Carriers of both the Merchandize and Treaſure of other States at Enmity with them. The Product of Barbary, viz. Bees-wax, Copper, Almonds, Dates, Morocco Leather, ſundry Drugs, &c. is now moſtly lodged in Warehouſes at our Port of Gibraltar, from whence thoſe Goods are ſaid to be ſent home to Britain and Ireland, nearly on as eaſy Terms as they were formerly brought directly from the Ports of Barbary; yet our Trade thither with our own Manufactures and Product is ſcarcely thought conſiderable enough to bring the Balance in our Favour.

On the Weſt Coaſts of Africa, our Commerce is principally for the Slave Trade of Guinea and Benin; where, however, we have neither Colony nor Plantation; but merely a Number of inconſiderable Forts on its Shores, for the Protection of our Trade with its wretched Natives; which indeed would be of little Importance to us, were it not for the great and conſtant Supplies we get from thence of Negro Slaves for our American Plantations, purchaſed intirely with our own Britiſh, Product and Manufactures of coarſe Woollen, Linen, Cotton, Iron, Braſs, Copper, Pewter, and Glaſs; alſo Armoury, Tools, Lead, and ſome Eaſt-India Articles; with which alſo we purchaſe ſome Gold-duſt, Gums, Ivory, and Guinea Pepper; being in effect all the product to be had on that barbarous Coaſt. So far, therefore, this Trade may be ſaid to be beneficial to us. The Legiſlature, of late Years, has laid this African Trade in ſome Sort open, under certain Regulations; whereby, it is to be hoped, it may in time be brought to flouriſh more than ever before.

With

With respect to the History of the general Trade to East-India (more particularly of our own Nation) its former and later Alterations and Fluctuations have taken up more Room in our ensuing Work, than perhaps any other single Branch of our Commerce. Whe shall therefore refer the Reader thither, after just remarking, (what many have done before) that, although our own present East-India Company enjoys an extensive Trade, and is seemingly in a very prosperous Condition, having many fine Forts and Factories, and a considerable territorial Property, in India; making also at home considerable Dividends, and such immense Sales too, as were never known in former Times; having also, of late Years, adorned even the City of London itself, not only with a fine Office, but with such spacious and numerous Warehouses as perhaps are scarcely equalled in any other Nation: All which are likewise their own Property. Yet, with respect to all Europe complexly taken, it seems to be universally agreed to be a pernicious Trade; a Trade, daining it of all or most of the Silver which America brings to it. If all Europe, therefore could be supposed jointly to agree in dropping the East-India Trade intirely, it would be better for the whole, as well as every particular Nation in it: For, unless it be the single, though indeed great, Article of Saltpetre, and some Medicinal, Dyers, and Painters Drugs, (all or most of which also America can supply) we can hardly recollect any necessarily-useful Commodity imported from thence, (some Gold from China, &c. likewise excepted) which does not interfere with the better Manufactures and Product of Europe. But as such a general Agreement is not to be expected; and as other European Nations would undoubtedly, in our Stead, supply all the neighbouring Nations with East-India Merchandize, (should we now at any time drop that Trade) to their own very great Advantage; and as, moreover, by our Laws, all the rich and numerous Indian Manufactures, directly interfering with our Silk, Woollen, and Linen ones, must necessarily be re-exported to foreign Countries; whereby, and by sundry other Articles so exported, it is now conjectured, by impartial and very competend Judges, that a considerable Balance is annually gained to this Kingdom; which, on Supposition of dropping all Commerce to India would be lost to us. Upon this very probable Presumtion, (which is submitted to every Reader's impartial Judgment) and also as Saltpetre is so absolutely necessary for our national and private Magazines for Gun-powder, for which we must otherwise be at the Mercy of dangerous Rivals; we must ever be of Opinion, that our East-India Trade, under its present Circumstances, is really a beneficial one for Great Britain; and that, moreover, on the same Supposition, it is highly for the Nation's as well as for the Company's Interest, to support, improve, and increase our East-India Commerce as much as is possible.

for

THE ENGLISH MERCHANT. *)

Act. II. Scene VII-XII.

Freeport and Mrs. Goodman.

My best friend! Welcome to London! When did you arrive from Lisbon?

Free. But last night.

Mrs. Good. I hope you have had a pleasant voyage?

Free. A good trading voyage — I have got money, but I have got the spleen too. — Have you any news in Town?

Mrs. Good. None at all, Sir.

Free. So much the better. The less news, the less nonsense. — But what strange lady have you had here? I met her as I was coming up: she rushed by like a fury, and almost swept me down stairs again with the wind of her hoop-petticoat.

Mrs. Good. Ah! jealousy! Jealousy is a terrible passion; especially in a woman's breast, Mr. Freeport.

Free. Jealousy! Why, she is not jealous of you, Mrs. Goodman?

Mrs. Good. No; but of a lodger of mine.

Free. Have you any new lodgers since I left you?

Mrs. Good. Two or three, Sir; the last arrived but to-day; an elderly gentleman, who will see no company.

Free. He's in the right. Three parts in four of mankind are knaves or fools; and the fourth part live by themselves. — But who are your other lodgers?

Mrs. Good. An author and a lady.

Free. I hate authors. Who is the lady?

Mrs. Good. She calls herself Amelia Walton; but I believe that name is not her real one.

*) A Comedy, by George Colman. Lond. 1767. 8.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0321
DFG

Free. Not her real one! Why, ſure ſhe is a woman of character?

Mrs. Good. A woman of character! She is angel. She is moſt miſerably poor; and yet haughty to an exceſs.

Free. Pride and poverty! A ſad compoſition, Mrs. Goodman.

Mrs. Good. No, Sir; her pride is one of her greateſt virtues: it conſiſts in depriving herſelf of almoſt all neceſſaries, and concealing it from the world. Tho' every action ſpeaks her to be a woman of birth and education, ſhe lives upon the work of her own hands without murmur or complaint. I make uſe of a thouſand ſtratagems to aſſiſt her againſt her will; I prevail on her to keep the money due for rent for her ſupport, and furniſh her with every thing ſhe wants at half its prime coſt; but if ſhe perceives or ſuſpects theſe little artifices, ſhe takes it almoſt as ill, as if I had attempted to defraud her. In ſhort, Sir, her unſhaken virtue and greatneſs of ſoul under misfortunes, make me conſider her as a prodigy, and often draw tears of pity and admiration from me.

Free. Ah! women's tears lie very near their eyes. I never cried in my life; and yet I can feel too; I can admire, I can eſteem, but what ſignifies whimpering? Hark ye, Mrs. Goodman! This is a very extraordinary account you give of this young woman; you have raiſed my curioſity, and I'll go and ſee this lodger of yours; I am rather out of ſpirits, and it will ſerve to amuſe me.

Mrs. Good. Oh, Sir, you can't ſee her; ſhe neither pays viſits nor receives them, but lives in the moſt retired manner in the world.

Free. So much the better. I love retirement as well as ſhe. Where are her apartments?

Mrs. Good. On this very floor, on the other ſide of the ſtaircaſe.

Free. I'll go and ſee her immediately.

Mrs. Good. Indeed you can't, Sir. It is impoſſible.

Free. Impoſſible! where is the impoſſibility of going into a room? Come along!

Mrs. Good. For heaven's ſake, Mr. Freeport!

Free. P'ſhaw! I have no time to loſe, I have buſineſs half an hour hence.

Mrs. Good. But won't it be rather indelicate, Sir? Let me prepare her firſt!

Free.

Free. Prepare her — With all my heart — But remember that I am a man of buſineſs, Mrs. Goodman, and have no time to waſte in ceremony and compliment. (Exeunt.

Amelia's apartement.

Amelia at work, and Molly.

Amel. No, Polly! If Lord Fallbridge comes again, I am reſolved not to ſee him.

Molly. Indeed, Madam, he loves you above all the world; I am ſure of it; and I verily believe he will run mad, if you don't hear what he has to ſay for himſelf.

Amel. Speak no more of him.

Enter Mrs. Goodman.

Mrs. Goodman!

Mrs. Good. Pardon me, Madam! Here is a gentleman of my acquaintance begs you would give him leave to ſpeak with you.

Amel. A gentleman! who is he?

Mrs. Good. His name is Freeport, Madam. He has a few particularities; but he is the beſt-hearted man in the world. Pray let him come in, Madam!

Amel. By no means; you know I receive viſits from nobody.

Enter Freeport.

Bleſs me! he's here. This is very extraordinary indeed, Mrs. Goodman.

Free. Don't diſturb yourſelf, young woman; don't diſturb yourſelf!

Molly. Mighty free and eaſy, methinks!

Amel. Excuſe me, Sir; I am not uſed to receive viſits from perſons entirely unknown.

Free. Unknown! There is not a man in all London better known than I am. I am a merchant, my name is Freeport: Freeport of Crutched-Friars; enquire upon 'Change!

Amel. Mrs. Goodman! I never ſaw the gentleman before. I am ſurpriſed at his coming here.

Free. Pooh! Prithee; Mrs. Goodman knows me well enough. (Mrs. Goodmann talks apart with Amelia.) Ay! that's right, Mrs. Goodman. Let her know who I am, and tell her to make herſelf eaſy.

Mrs. Good. But the lady does not chuſe we ſhould trouble her, Sir.

Free. Trouble her? I'll give her no trouble; I came to drink a dish of tea with you; let your maid get it ready, and we will have it here instead of your parlour. — In the mean time I will talk with this lady; I have something to say to her.

Amel. If you had any business, Sir —

Free. Business! I tell you I have very particular business; so sit down, and let's have the tea.

Mrs. Good. You shou'd not have followed me so soon, Sir.

Free. Pooh, prithee! Exit Mrs. Goodman.

Molly. This is the oddest man I ever saw in my life.

Amel. Well, Sir, as I see you are a particular acquaintance of Mrs. Goodman — But pray what are your commands for me, Sir! (they sit.

Free. I tell you what, young woman; I am a plain man, and will tell you my mind in an instant. I am told that you are one of the best women in the world; very virtuous, and very poor; I like you for that: but they say you are excessively proud too; now I don't like you for that, Madam

Molly. Free and easy still, I see.

Amel. And pray, Sir, who told you so?

Free. Mrs. Goodman.

Amel. She has deceived you, Sir; not in regard to my pride, perhaps, for there is a certain right pride which every body, especially women, ought to possess! and as to virtue, it is no more than my duty; but as to poverty, I disclaim it; they who want nothing, cannot be said to be poor.

Free. It is no such thing: you don't speak the truth; and that is worse than being proud. I know very well that you are as poor as Job, that you are in want of common necessaries, and don't make a good meal above once in a fortnight.

Molly. My mistress fast for her health, Sir.

Free. Hold your tongue, hussy! what, are you proud too?

Nelly. Lord, what a strange man!

Free. But however, Madam, proud or not proud, does not signify two pence. — Hark ye, young woman! it is a rule with me (as it ought to be with every good Christian) to give a tenth part of my fortune in charity. In the account of my profits there stands at present the sum of two thousand pounds on the credit side of my books; so that I am

am two hundred pounds in arrear. This I look upon as a debt due from my fortune to your poverty — Yes, your poverty I say, so never deny it. There's a Bank note for two hundred pounds; and now I am out of your debt. — Where the deuce is this tea, I wonder?

Molly. I never saw such a man in my life.

Amel. I don't know that I ever was so thoroughly confounded (apart.) — Sir! (to Freeport.)

Free. Well?

Amel. This noble action has surprised me still more than your conversation, but you must excuse my refusal of your kindness; for I must confess, that if I were to accept what you offer, I don't know when I should be able to restore it.

Free. Restore it! why, who wants you to restore it? I never dreamt of restitution.

Amel. I feel, I feel your goodness to the bottom of my soul; but you must excuse me. I have no occasion for your bounty; take your note, Sir, and bestow it where it is wanted.

Molly. Lord, Madam! you are ten times stranger than the gentleman. — I tell you what, Sir; (to Freeport) it does not signify talking; we are in the greatest distress in the world, and if it had not been for the kindness and good-nature of Mrs. Goodman, we might have died by this time. My lady has concealed her distress from every body that was willing and able to relieve her; you have come to the knowledge of it in spite of her teeth; and I hope that you will oblige her, in spite of her teeth, to accept of your generous offer.

Amel. No more, my dear Polly; if you would not have me die with shame, say no more! Return the gentleman his note with my best thanks for his kindness; tell him, I durst not accept of it; for when a woman receives presents from a man, the world will always suspect that she pays for them at the expence of her virtue.

Free. What's that! what does she say, child?

Molly. Lord, Sir, I hardly know what she says. She says, that when a gentleman makes a young lady presents, he is al ways supposed to have a design upon her virtue.

Free. Nonsense! why shou'd she suspect me of an ungenerous design, because I do a generous action?

Molly. Do you hear, Madam?

Amel. Yes, I hear; I admire; but I must persist in my refusal: if that scandalous fellow Spatter were to hear of this, he would stick at saying nothing.

Free. Eh! what's that?

Molly. She is afraid you should be taken for her lover, Sir.

Free. I for your lover! not I. I never saw you before. I don't love you; so make no scruples upon that account; I like you well enough, but I don't love you at all; not at all; I tell you. — If you have a mind never to see my face any more, good bye t'ye! — You shall never see me any more. If you like I should come back again, I'll come back again; but I lose time, I have business; your servant! (doing.

Amel. Stay, Sir! do not leave me without receiving the sincerest acknowledgments of my gratitude and esteem; but, above all, receive your note again, and do not put me any longer to the blush!

Free. The woman is a fool.

Enter Mrs. Goodman.

Amel. Come hither, I beseech you, Mrs. Goodman.

Mrs Good. Your pleasure, Madam!

Amel. Here! take this note which that gentleman has given me by mistake; return it to him, I charge you; assure him of my esteem and admiration; but let him know I need no assistance, and cannot accept it. (Exit.

Manent Freeport, &c.

Mrs. Goo. Ah! Mr. Freeport! you have been at your old trade. You are always endeavouring to do good actions in secret; but the world always finds you out, you see.

Molly. Well; I don't believe there are two stranger people in England than my mistress, and that gentleman; one so ready to part with money; and the other so unwilling to receive it; — but don't believe her, Sir, for between friends, she is in very great need of assistance I assure you.

Mrs Good. Indeed I believe so.

Free. Oh, I have no doubt on't, so I'll tell you what, Mrs. Goodman; keep the note, and supply her wants out of it without her knowledge; and now I think of it, that way is better than t'other.

Molly. I never saw such a strange man in my life. (Exit.

Mrs. Good. I shall obey your kind commands, Sir; poor soul! my heart bleeds for her; her virtue and misfortunes touch me to the soul.

Free.

Free. I have ſoome little feeling for her too; but ſhe is too proud. A fine face, fine figure; well behaved; well bred; and I dare ſay an excellent heart! — But ſhe is too proud; tell her ſo, d'ye hear? tell her ſhe is too proud. I ſhall be too late for my buſineſs — I'll ſee her again ſoon — It is a pity ſhe is ſo proud. (Exeunt.

Act. III. Scene VII - X.

Sir William Douglas. Amelia.

Enter Owen haſtily.

Ha! Owen! thou art come at at a happy moment. I have found my daughter. This is your young miſtreſs, the paragon of her ſex, my dear, my amiable Amelia.

Owen. Oh, Sir, this is no time for congratulation. You are in the moſt imminent danger.

Sir W. What is the matter?

Owen. The officers of government are at this inſtant in the houſe. I ſaw them enter; I heard them ſay they had authority to apprehend ſome ſuſpected perſon, and I ran immediately to inform you of your danger.

Amel. Oh, heaven! My father, what will you do?

Owen. Do not be alarmed, Sir; we are two; we are armed; and we may perhaps be able to make our way through them; I will ſtand by you to the laſt drop of my blood.

Sir W. Thou faithful creature! Stay, Owen; our fears may betray us; till we are ſure we are attacked, let us ſhew no ſigns of oppoſition!

Enter Molly, haſtily.

Molly. My dear miſtreſs! we are ruined; we are undone for ever.

Amel. There are officers of juſtice in the houſe; I have heard it; tell me, tell me this inſtant whom do they ſeek for?

Molly. For you, Madam; for you; they have a warrant to apprehend you, they ſay.

Amel. But they have no warrant to apprehend any body elſe?

Molly. No, Madam; nobody elſe; but I will follow you to the end of the world.

Amel. My dear Polly, I did not mean you. Retire, Sir! (to Sir William.) For heavens ſake leave me to their mercy; they can have no facts againſt me; my life has been as innocent as unfortunate, and I muſt ſoon be releaſed.

Sir W. No, my child; I will not leave thee.

Molly. My child? This is Sir William Douglas then, as ſure as I am alive!

Sir W. Beſides, retiring at ſuch a time might create ſuſpicion, and incur the danger we would wiſh to avoid.

Molly. They will be in the room in a moment; I think I hear them upon the ſtairs; they would have been here before me, if Mr. Freeport had not come in and ſtopt them.

Sir W. Courage, my dear Amelia!

Amel. Alas, Sir! I have no terrors but for you.

Owen. They are here, Sir.

Molly. Oh! lord! here they are indeed; I am frighted out of my wits.

Enter Mrs. Goodman, Freeport, and Officer.

Free. A warrant to ſeize her? a harmleſs young woman? it is impoſſible.

Officer. Pardon me, Sir; if the young lady goes by the name of Amelia Walton, I have a warrant to apprehend her.

Free. On what account!

Officer. As a dangerous perſon.

Free. Dangerous!

Officer. Yes, Sir; ſuſpected of diſaffection and treaſonable practices.

Amel. I am the unhappy object of your ſearch, Sir; give me leave to know the ſubſtance of the accuſation.

Officer. I cannot tell you particulars, Madam; but information upon oath has been made againſt you, and I am ordered to apprehend you.

Mrs. Good. But you will accept of bail, Sir; I will be bound for all I am worth in the world.

Officer. In theſe caſes, Madam, bail is not uſual; and if ever accepted at all, it is exceſſively high, and given by Perſons of very large property, and known character.

Free. Well; my property is large enough, and my character very well known My name is Freeport.

Officer. I know you very well, Sir.

Free. I'll anſwer for her appearance; I'll be bound in a penalty of five hundred pounds, a thouſand, two thouſand or what ſum you pleaſe.

Officer.

Officer. And will you enter into the recogniſance immediately?

Free. With all my heart, come along! (going.

Officer. And are you in earneſt, Sir?

Free. Ay, to be ſure. Why not?

Officer. Becauſe, Sir, I'll venture to ſay there are but few people that place their money on ſuch ſecurities.

Free. So much the worſe; he who can employ it in doing good, places it on the beſt ſecurity, and puts it out at the higheſt intereſt in the world. (Exit, with the Officer.

Manent Sir William Douglas, &c,

Sir W. I can hardly truſt my eyes and ears; who is this benevolent gentleman?

Mrs. Good. I don't wonder you are ſurpriſed at Mr. Freeport's manner of proceeding, Sir; but it is his way. He is not a man of compliment; but he does the moſt eſſential ſervice in leſs time, than others take in making proteſtations.

Molly. Here he is again; heaven reward him!

Re-enter Freeport.

Free. So! that matter is diſpached; now to our other affairs! this is a buſy day with me — Look-ye, Sir William; we muſt be brief; there is no time to be loſt.

Sir W. How! am I betrayed then!

Free. Betrayed! no; but you are diſcovered.

Owen. What! my maſter diſcovered. (offers to draw.

Free. (to Owen) Nay, never clap thy hand to thy ſword, old truſty! your maſter is in danger, it is true; but not from me, I promiſe you. Go, and get him a poſt-chaiſe; and let him pack off this inſtant; that is the beſt way of ſhewing your attachment to him at preſent. — Twenty years, Sir William, have not made ſo great an alteration in you, but I knew you the moment I ſaw you.

Mrs. Good. Harbour no diſtruſt of Mr. Freeport, Sir; he is one of the worthieſt men living.

Amel. I know his worthineſs. His behaviour to the officer but this moment, uncommonly generous as it appeared, is not the firſt teſtimony he has given me to day, of his noble diſpoſition.

Free. Noble! p'ſhaw! nonſenſe!

Sir W. (to Freeport) Sir; the kind manner in which you have been pleaſed to intereſt yourſelf in my affairs, has almoſt as much overpowered me, as if you had ſurpriſed me with hostile proceedings. Which way shall I thank you for your goodness to me and my Amelia?

Free. Don't thank me at all; when you are out of danger, perhaps I may make a proposal to you, that will not be disagreeable; at present think of nothing but your escape; for I should not be surprised, if they were very shortly to make you the same compliment, they have paid to Amelia; and in your case, which is really a serious one, they might not be in the humour to accept of my recognisance.

Mrs. Good. Mr Freeport is in the right, Sir; every moment of delay is hazardous; let us prevail upon you to depart immediately! Amelia being wholly innocent, cannot be long detained in custody, and as soon as she is released, I will bring her to you, wherever you shall appoint.

Free. Ay, ay, you must be gone directly, Sir! and as you may want ready money upon the road, take my purse! (offering his purse.

Sir W. No, thou truest friend, I have no need of it. With what wonderful goodness have you acted towards me and my unhappy family!

Free. Wonderful! why wonderful? Would not you have done the same, if you had been in my place?

Sir W. I hope I should.

Free. Well then, where is the wonder of it? Come, come, let us see you make ready for your departure!

Sir W. Thou best of men!

Free. Best of men? Heaven forbid! I have done no more than my duty by you. I am a man myself; and am bound to be a friend to all mankind, you know. (Exeunt.

Act. V.

A Hall.

Lord Falbridge and Molly meeting.

Molly. Oh, my Lord! I am glad to see you returned.

L. Fal. Where is your mistress? (eagerly.

Molly. In her own chamber.

L. Fal. And where is Sir William Douglas?

Molly. With my mistress.

L. Fal.

L. Fal. And have there been no officers here to apprehend them?

Molly. Officers! No, my Lord. Officers! you frighten me. I was in hopes, by seeing your Lordship so soon again, that there were some good news for us.

L. Fal. Newer was any thing so unfortunate. The noble persons, to whom I meant to make application, were out of town; nor could by any means be seen or spoken with, till to morrow morning: and to add to my distraction, I learnt that a new information had been made, and a new warrant issued to apprehend Sir William Douglas and Amelia.

Molly. Oh dear! What can we do then?

L. Fal. Do! I shall run mad. Go, my dear Polly, go to your Mistress, and Sir William, and inform them of their danger. Every moment is precious, but perhaps they may yet have time to escape.

Molly. I will, my Lord! (going.

L. Fal. Stay! (Molly returns.) My chariot is at the door; tell them, not to wait for any other carriage, but to get into that, and drive away immediately.

Molly. I will, my Lord. Oh dear! I never was so terrified in all my life. (Exit.

Lord Faldbridge alone.

If I can but save them now, we may gain time for mediation. Ha! what noise? Are the officers coming! Who's here?

Enter La France.

La Fr. Milor, Monsr. le Duc de — —

L. Fal. Sirrah! Villain! You have been the occasion of all this mischief. By your carelessness, or treachery, Lady Alton has intercepted my letter to Amelia.

La Fr. Lèdy Altón?

L. Fal. Yes, dog; did not I send you here this morning with a letter?

La Fr. Oui, Milor.

L. Fal. And did you bring it here, rascal!

La Fr. Oui, Milor.

L. Fal. No, sirrah. You did not bring it; the lady never received any letter from me; she told me so herself; whom did you give it to? (La France hesitates.) Speak, sirrah; or I'll shake your soul out of your body. (shaking him.

La Fr. I giv it to — —

L. Fal. Who, rascal?

La Fr. Monsieur Spatter.

L. Fal.

L. Fal. Mr. Spatter?

La Fr. Oui, Milor; he promis to giv it to Mademoiſelle Amelie, vid his own hand.

L. Fal. I ſhall ſoon know the truth of that, Sir, for yonder is Mr Spatter himſelf: run, and tell him I deſire to ſpeak with him!

La Fr. Oui, Milor; ma foi, I vas very near keſh; I never was in more vilain embarras in all my life. (Exit.

Lord Falbridge alone.

My letter's falling into the hands of that fellow, accounts for every thing. The contents inſtructed him concerning Amelia. What a wretch I am! Deſtined every way to be of prejudice to that virtue, which I am bound to adore.

Re-enter La France with Spatter.

Spat. Monſieur la France tells me, that your Lordſhip deſires to ſpeak with me; what are your commands, my Lord? (pertly.

L. Fal. The eaſy impudence of the raſcal puts me out of all patience. (to himſelf.

Spat. My Lord!

L. Fal. The laſt time I ſaw you, Sir, you were rewarded for the good you had done; you muſt expect now to be chaſtiſed for your miſchief.

Spat. Miſchief, my Lord?

L. Fal. Yes, Sir; where is that letter of mine, which La France tells me, he gave you to deliver to a young lady of this houſe?

Spat. Oh the devil! (apart.) Letter, my Lord? (heſitates.

L. Fal. Yes, letter, Sir; did not you give it him, La France?

La Fr. Oui, Milor!

Spat. Y—e—e—s, yes, my Lord; I had the letter of Monſieur La France, to be ſure, my Lord; but — but —

L. Fal. But what, ſirrah? give me the letter immediately; and if I find that the ſeal has been broken, I will break every bone in your ſkin.

Spat. For heaven's ſake, my Lord! (feeling in his pockets. I — I — I have not got the letter about me at preſent, my Lord; but if you will give me leave to ſtep to my apartment, I'll bring it you immediately. (offering to go.

L. Fal. (ſtopping him.) No, no; that will not do, Sir; you ſhall not ſtir, I promiſe you. — Look ye, raſcal! tell me, me, what is become of my letter, or I will be the death of you this instant.

Spat. (kneeling.) Put up your sword, my Lord; put up your sword; and I will tell you every thing in the world. Indeed, I will.

L. Fal. Well, Sir; be quick then! (putting up his sword.

Spat. Lady Alton —

L. Fal. Lady Alton! I thought so; go on, Sir.

Spat. Lady Alton, my Lord, desired me to procure her all the intelligence in my power, concerning every thing that past between your Lordship and Amelia.

L. Fal. Well, Sir; what then?

Spat. A little patience, I entreat your Lordship. Accordingly, to oblige her Ladyship — one must oblige the ladies, you know, my Lord — I did keep a pretty sharp look-out, I must confess; and this morning, meeting Monsieur La France with a letter from your Lordship in his charge, I very readily gave him five guineas of her Ladyship's bounty-money, to put it into my hands.

La Fr. Oh Diable! me voilà perdu! (aside.

L. Fal. How! A bribe, rascal? (to La France.

La Fr. Ah, Milor! (on his knees.

Spat. At the same price for every letter, he would have sold a whole mail, my Lord.

La Fr. Ayez pitie de moi! (holding up his hands.

L. Fal. Betray the confidence I reposed in you?

Spat. He offered me the letter of his own accord, my Lord.

La Fr. No such ting, en verité Milor!

Spat. Very true, I can assure your Lordship.

L. Fal. Well, well; I shall chastise him at my leisure. At present, Sir, do you return me my letter.

Spat. I — I have it not about me, my Lord.

L. Fal. Where is it, rascal? tell me this instant, or —

La Fr. Lèdy Altón —

L. Fal. (to Spatter.) What! has she got it? speak, Sirrah!

Spat. She has indeed, my Lord.

L. Fal. Are not you a couple of villains?

La Fr. Oui, Milor. } both speak at once.

Spat. Yes, my Lord! }

L. Fal. (to Spat.) But hold, Sir? a word more with you! As you seem to be Lady Alton's chief agent, I must desire some further information from you.

Spat.

Spat. Any thing in my power, my Lord.

L. Fal. I can account for her knowledge of Amelia by means of my letter: but how did ſhe diſcover Sir William Douglas?

Spat. I told her, my Lord.

L. Fal. But how did you diſcover him yourſelf?

Spat. By liſtening, my Lord.

L. Fal. By liſtening?

Spat. Yes, by liſtening, my Lord! let me but once be about a houſe, and I'll engage to clear it, like a ventilator, my Lord. There is not a door to a ſingle apartment in this houſe, but I have planted my ear at the keyhole.

L. Fal. And where theſe the means, by which you procured your intelligence?

Spat. Yes, my Lord.

L. Fal. Impoſſible.

Spat. Oh dear! nothing ſo eaſy; this is nothing at all, my Lord! I have given an account of the plays in our Journal, for three months together, without being nearer the ſtage than the pit-paſſage; and I have collected the debates of a whole ſeſſion, for the Magazine, only by attending in the lobby.

L. Fal. Precious raſcal! — Ha! who comes here? Lady Alton herſelf again, as I live!

Spat. (apart.) The devil ſhe is! I wiſh I was out of the houſe.

Enter Lady Alton.

L. Alt. What! ſtill here, my Lord? ſtill witneſſing to your own ſhame, and the juſtice of my reſentment?

L. Fal. Yes, I am ſtill here, Madam; and ſorry to be made a witneſs of your cruelty and meanneſs; of your deſcending to arts, ſo much beneath your rank; and practices, ſo unworthy of your ſex.

L. Alt. You talk in riddles, my Lord!

L. Fal. This gentleman ſhall explain them. Here, Madam! here is the engine of your malice, the inſtrument of your vengeance, your prime miniſter, Mr. Spatter?

L. Alt. What have I to do with Mr. Spatter?

L. Fal. To do miſchief; to intercept letters, and break them open; to overhear private converſations, and betray them; to ---

L. Alt. Have you laid any thing of this kind to my charge, Sir? (to Spatter.

Spat. I have been obliged to ſpeak the truth, though much againſt my will, indeed, Madam. L. Alt.

L. Alt. The truth! thou father of lies, did ever any truth proceed from thee? What! is his Lordſhip your new patron! A fit Mæcenas for thee, thou ſcandal to the belles lettres!

L. Fal. Your rage at this detection is but a freſh conviction of your guilt.

L. Alt. Do no triumph, monſter! you ſhall ſtill feel the ſuperiority I have over you. The object of your wiſhes is no longer under your protection; the officers of the government entered the houſe at the ſame time with myſelf, with a warrant to ſeize both Amelia and her father.

L. Fal. Confuſion! Are not they gone then? La France! villain! run, and bring me word!

La Fr. I go, Milor! (Exit.

L. Alt. Do not flatter yourſelf with any hopes; they have not eſcaped; here they are, ſecured in proper hands.

L. Fal. Death and diſtraction! now I am completely miſerable. Enter Sir William Douglas, Amelia, Owen. and Officers.

L. Alt. Yes, your miſery is complete indeed; and ſo ſhall be my revenge. Oh! your ſervant, Madam! (turning to Amelia) You now ſee to what a condition your pride and obſtinacy have reduced you. Dit not I bid you tremble at the conſequences?

Amel. It was here alone that I was vulnerable. (holding her father's hand.) Oh, Madam! (turning to Lady Alton) by the virtues that ſhould adorn your rank, by the tenderneſs of your ſex, I conjure you, pity my diſtreſs! do but releaſe my father; and there are no conceſſions, however humiliating, which you may not exact from me.

L. Alt. Thoſe conceſſions now come too late, Madam. If I were even inclined to relieve you, at preſent it is not in my power. (haughtily.) Lord Falbridge perhaps may have more intereſt. (with a ſneer.

L. Fal. Cruel, inſulting woman! (to Lady Alton.) Do not alarm yourſelf, my Amelia! — Do not be concerned, Sir! (to Sir William.) Your enemies ſhall ſtill be diſappointed. Altho' ignorant of your arrival, I have for ſome time paſt exerted all my intereſt in your favour, and by the mediation of thoſe ſtill more powerful, I do not deſpair of ſucceſs. Your caſe is truly a compaſſionate one; and in that breaſt, from which alone mercy can proceed, thank heaven, there is the greateſt reaſon to expect it.

Sir W. I am obliged to you for your concern, Sir.

L. Fal.

L. Fal. Oh! I owe you all this, and much more - - - But this is no time to ſpeak of my Offences, or repentance.

L. Alt. This is mere trifling. I thought you knew on what occaſion you came hither, Sir. (to the Officer.

Officer. Your reproof is too juſt, Madam. I attend you, Sir. (to Sir William.

L. Fal. Hold! Let me prevail on you, Sir, (to the Officer) to ſuffer them to remain here till tomorrow morning. I will anſwer for the conſequences.

Officer. Pardon me, my Lord! we ſhould be happy to oblige you; but we muſt diſcharge the duty of our office.

L. Fal. Diſtraction!

Sir W. Come then! we follow you, Sir! Be comforted, my Amelia! for my ſake, be comforted! Wretched as I am, your anxiety ſhocks me more than my own misfortunes.

(As they are going out, Enter Freeport.

Free. Heyday! what now! the officers here again! I thought we had ſatisfied you this morning. What is the meaning of all this?

Officer. This will inform you, Sir. (giving the warrant.

Free. How's this? Let me ſee! (reading.) This it to require you — um um — the bodies of William Ford and Amelia Walton--um--um--ſuſpected perſons—um—um—Well, well! I ſee what this is: but you will accept of bail, Sir.

Officer. No, Sir; this caſe is not bailable, and we have already been reprimanded for taking your recogniſance this morning.

Sir W. Thou good man! I ſhall ever retain the moſt lively ſenſe of your behaviour: but your kind endeavours to preſerve the poor remainder of my proſcribed life are in vain. We muſt ſubmit to our deſtiny. (all going.

Free. Hold, hold! one word, I beſeech you, Sir! (to the Officer) a minute or two will make no difference — Bail then, it ſeems, will not do, Sir?

Officer No, Sir.

Free. Well, well; then I have ſomething here that will perhaps. (feeling in his pocket.

L. Fal. How!

L. Alt. What does he mean?

Free. No, it is not there. — It is in t'other pocket, I believe. Here, Sir William! (producing a parchment.) Aſk the gentleman, if that will not do. — But firſt of all, read it yourſelf, and let us hear how you like the contents.

Sir

Sir W. What do I see! (openig and perusing it.) My pardon! the full and free pardon of my offences! Oh heaven! and is it to you then, to you, Sir, that I owe all this? — Thus, thus let me shew my gratitude to my benefactor!

(falling at his feet.

Free. Get up, get up, Sir William! Thank heaven, and the most gratious of monarchs. You have very little obligation to me, I promise you.

Amel. My father restored! Then I am the happiest of women.

L. Fal. A pardon! I am transported.

L. Alt. How's this? a pardon!

Free. Under the great seal, Madam.

L. Alt. Confusion! what! am I baffled at last then? Am I disappointed even of my revenge? — Thou officious fool! (to Freeport.) May these wretches prove as great a torment to you, as they have been to me! As for thee, (to Lord Falbridge) thou perfidious monster, may thy guilt prove thy punishment! May you obtain the unworthy union you desire! May your wife prove as false to you, as you have been to me! May you be followed, like Orestes, with the furies of a guilty conscience; find your error when it is too late; and die in all the horrors of despair! (Exit.

Free. There goes a woman of quality for you! what little actions! and what a great soul! — Ha! Master Spatter! where are you going? (to Spatter, who is sneaking off.

Spat. Following the Muse, Sir! (pointing after Lady Alton.) But if you have any further commands, or his Lordship should have occasion for me to write his Epithalamium —

L. Fal. Peace, wretch! sleep in a whole skin, and be thankful! I would sollicit mercy myself, and have not leisure to punish you. Be gone, Sir!

Spat. I am obliged to your Lordship — This affair will make a good article for the Evening-Post to-night, however.

(Aside, and Exit.

Sir W. How happy has this reverse of fortune made me! — But my surprise is almost equal to my joy. May we beg you, Sir, (to Freeport) to inform us how your benevolence has effected what seems almost a miracle in my av our?

Free. In two words then, Sir William, this happy event is chiefly owing to your old friend, the late Lord Brumpton.

Sir W. Lord Brumpton!

Free. Yes; honeſt Owen there told me, that his Lordſhip had been employed in ſolliciting your pardon. Dit not you, Owen?

Owen. I did, Sir.

Free. Upon hearing that, and perceiving the danger you were in, I went immediately to the preſent Lord Brumpton; who is a very honeſt fellow, and one of the oldeſt acquaintance I have in the world. He, at my inſtance, immediately made the neceſſary application; and gueſs how agreeably we were ſurpriſed to hear that the Lord had already been ſucceſsful, and that the pardon had been made out, on the very morning of the day his Lordſhip died. Away went I, as faſt as a pair of horſes could carry me, to fetch it; and ſhould certainly have prevented this laſt arreſt, if the warrant to apprehend you, as dangerous perſons, had nod iſſued under your aſſumed names of William Ford and Amelia Walton, againſt whom the information had been laid. But, however, it has only ſerved to prevent your running away, when the danger was over, for at preſent, Sir William, thank heaven and his majeſty, you are a whole man again; and you have nothing to do but to make a legal appearance, and to plead the pardon I have brought you, to abſolve you from all informations.

L. Fal. Thou honeſt excellent man! How happily have you ſupplied, what I failed to accompliſh!

Free. Ay, I heard that your Lordſhip had been buſy. — You had more friends at Court than one, Sir William, I promiſe you.

Sir W. I am overwhelmed with my ſudden good fortune, and am poor even in thanks. Teach me, Mr. Freeport, teach me how to make ſome acknowledgement for your extraordinary generoſity.

Free. I'll tell you what, Sir William. Notwithſtanding your daughter's pride, I took a liking to her, the moment I ſaw her.

L. Fal. Ha! What's this!

Free. What's the matter, my Lord?

L. Fal. Nothing. Go on, Sir!

Free. Why then, to confeſs the truth, I am afraid that my benevolence, which you have all been pleaſed to praiſe ſo highly, had ſome little leaven of ſelf-intereſt in it; and I was deſirous to promote Amelia's happineſs more ways than one.

L. Fal.

L. Fal. Then I am the verieſt wretch that ever exiſted. — But take her, Sir! for I muſt confeſs that you have deſerved her by your proceedings; and that I, fool and villain that I was, have forfeited her by mine. (going.

Free. Hold, hold! one word before you go, if you pleaſe, my Lord! You may kill yourſelf for aught I know, but you ſhan't lay your death at my door, I promiſe you. I had a kindneſs for Amelia, I muſt confeſs; but in the courſe of my late negotiation for Sir William, hearing of your Lordſhip's pretenſions, I dropt all thoughts of her. It is a maxim with me, to do good wherever I can, but always to abſtain from doing miſchief. — Now as I can't make the lady happy myſelf, I would fain put her into the hands of thoſe that can. — So, if you would oblige me, Sir William, let me join theſe two young folks together, (joining their hands) and do you ſay Amen to it.

Sir W. With all my heart! — You can have no objection, Amelia. (Amelia burſts into tears.

L. Fal. How bitterly do thoſe tears reproach me! It ſhall be the whole buſineſs of my future life to atone for them.

Amel. Your actions this day, and your ſolicitude for my father, have redeemed you in my good opinion; and the conſent of Sir William, ſeconded by ſo powerful an advocate as Mr. Freeport, cannot be contended with. Take my hand, my Lord! a virtuous paſſion may inhabit the pureſt breaſt; and I am not aſhamed to confeſs, that I had conceived a partiality for you, till your own conduct turned my heart againſt you; and if my reſentment has given you any pain, when I conſider the occaſion, I muſt own that I cannot repent it.

L. Fal. Mention it no more, my love, I beſeech you! You may juſtly blame your lover, I confeſs; but I will never give you cauſe to complain of your huſband.

Free. I don't believe you will. I give you joy, my Lord! I give you all joy. As for you, Madam, (to Amelia) do but ſhew the world that you can bear proſperity, as well as you have ſuſtained the ſhocks of adverſity, and there are few women, who may not wiſh to be an Amelia.

Verzeichniſs
einiger
in dieſem Buche vorkommenden Wörter und Redensarten, die
in den Wörterbüchern fehlen.

A.

Aborigines, Eingebohrne, erſte Einwohner eines Landes.

Abſentees, wird bloſs von reichen Irländern gebraucht, die ſich lange auſſer ihrem Vaterlande, beſonders in England, aufhalten, und da ihre Einkünfte verzehren.

Ace, I was within an ace of doing it: Ich war auf dem Puncte, es zu thun.

Alligator, Art Krokodile, Caymán. (vom Spaniſchen El Lagarto, eine Eidexe.)

Animula Vagula, S. 201. Flüchtiges Seelchen, der Anfang eines lateiniſchen Liedes des Kaiſers Hadrian an ſeine Seele.

An't (ſtatt and if it) pleaſe Your Honour. Mit Ihrer Gnaden Wohlnehmen: — Ein Ausdruck gemeiner Leute gegen ihre Obern, Richter u. d. gl.

Architrave, Unterbalken, unterſte Theil eines Hauptgeſimſes.

Area, Vorhof, Hofplatz.

Arthur's, die berühmteſte Hoftaverne in London, wo ſtark geſpielt wird.

Aver-eas, S. 138. Ein türkiſches Wort: Konfiſkationen der Güter und Erpreſſungen, die durch ungerechte Proceſſe über einen Unſchuldigen verhängt werden.

Authoritative injunction, Machtſpruch, entſcheidender Befehl.

A-wel-o' day. Ein Ausruf — Gütiger Himmel! u. d. gl. wie Alack o' day.

B.

Barrow-Bunter. Ein altes Weib, das Früchte auf einem Schiebkarn feil hat.

Bart, d. i. Baronet.

Battery, Keſſel, und dergleichen Waaren, welche in Meſſing- und Kupferhämmern verfertigt werden.

Beetel. S. 240. Ein Kraut, womit in Oſtindien ſtarker Handel getrieben wird. Man vermiſcht es mit Beetlenut, lenut, oder richtiger Arek, (einer Art Nüsse, die auf einem Palmbaum wächst) wie auch mit Muschelkalk (Chunám) &c. und kauet es, wie die Matosen Toback kauen.

Beside. I was beside myself: Ich war ausser mir, sinnlos.

Bills of mortality, Todtenlisten. Within the Bills of mortality: Innerhalb der Stadt London, so weit die Todten in die Listen eingetragen werden; denn die Todtenlisten erstrecken sich nicht auf alle Häuser, die man wohl zu den drei Städten von London rechnen mögte.

Bon-ton, (ist ein französisches Modewort) Ton der guten Gesellschaft.

Bounty-money S. 317. Prämie.

Bucaniers, Americanische Freibeuter.

Bullion, ungemünzt und unverarbeitet Gold oder Silber.

Bulley-tree, S. 251. Ein Jamaikanischer Baum; Sloane nennt ihn Anona, Brown Chrysophyllum. Die Frucht heist Starapple, Sternapfel, und wird dort sehr geschätzt.

Burgh, schottisch; auf englisch Borough.

C.

Cabbage-tree, Kohl-Palmbaum. (franz. Choux palmier.)

Callicoes, Ostindische u. a. baumwollene Zeuge, welche wir Kattune nennen, sowohl ungedruckte weisse, als gedruckte. Cottons, die verschiedenen übrigen baumwollenen Zeuge überhaupt. Chints, Zitze oder die feinsten gemalten Kattune.

Canvas, S. 115. ein Bret oder Tuch, vor den Gläsern an einer Kutsche, welches, wie diese, kann aufgezogen und niedergelassen werden.

Capitoul. Eine Obrigkeit in Toulouse u. s. w. wie die Echevins zu Paris. Polizeidirektor.

Cassava, oder Manioc S. 185. Eine mehligte Wurzel, wovon die Amerikaner Brodt machen: Brodtwurzel.

Cask-staves. Piepenstäbe.

to Catch hold of — sich woran halten.

Charity schools, Freischulen.

Chints, Zitze. S. oben.

Chip-hats, Basthüte fürs Frauenzimmer.

Cit, ein Städter, abgekürzt aus Citizen, wird im Scherz oder auch verächtlich gebraucht.

to clear, S. 172. Reinen Ueberschuss geben.

Clerk, 1) Schreiber, 2) Handelsdiener, 3) Küster.

Coalition, Vereinigung zu einer Masse, einem Ganzen.

Coasting-trade, Küstenhandel.

Cod-fish, Stockfisch.

Colipever, S. 250 oder Callipever, Eine jamaicanische Fisch-

Fischart, wofür wir keinen Namen haben. Es ist eine Art Meeräschen.

Colonization, Anlegung einer Kolonie, Communibus annis, (ist lateinisch) Ein Jahr ins andere gerechnet.

Competition, Gleichsetzung, Gemeinmachen.

Consequence. He will give himself consequence with me: Er will sich ein Verdienst um mich erwerben, sich wichtig bey mir machen.

Contractor, Lieferant.

Contiguity. The great contiguity of London: Der grosse Bezirk von London.

Continuous, angränzend.

Coridor, ein schmaler Gang, oder Gallerie, welche zu mehrern Zimmern führet.

Coroners Inquest. Die Untersuchung eines Gerichtsbedienten, dessen Amt ist, wenn todte Körper gefunden werden, zu bestimmen, ob sie natürlich gestorben, oder ermordet sind.

Coroners Jury, zwölf geschworne Männer, welche über die Wahrheit eines angeschuldigten Mordes entscheiden.

Corporation of Bath, Rath und Bürgerschaft von Bath.

Crockery merchant, einer der mit Töpferwaare und Steingut handelt.

Curricombs, Pferdestriegel.

to cut out. S. 122. Ausstechen, verdrängen.

Cupola, oder Dome, Kuppel. Ein Dach, in Gestalt einer Halbkugel.

Cylinders, Feldschlangen; Art Canonen.

Cymiter, Säbel.

D.

Deucaledonian Ocean, der Theil des Weltmeers zwischen Europa und Nordamerica.

Dissenting meeting - houses, Kapellen der Dissenter, d i. die sich nicht zur englischen hohen Kirche bekennen.

Dockyards, Schifswerfte.

Dome. S. Cupola.

Drum. S. 184. Eine Spielgesellschaft. Assemblee.

Drum mayor. Eben dasselbe, nur gröfser und vornehmer.

E.

Edda. S. 194. Eine guineische Pflanze; wird izt auch viel in Amerika gebaut, wo sonderlich die Negern ihre Wurzeln gekocht essen. Heist auch sonst Eddoes, (im plural.)

to Espouse the popular prejudice, das allgemeine Vorurtheil annehmen, eifrig vertheidigen.

Esq. d. i. Esquire. So schreiben sich in England eigentlich alle nachgebohrne Kinder des hohen Adels, und jeder, der 500 Pfund jährliche Renten von Landgütern hat. Jezt überhaupt jeder bemittelte feine Mann.

Exeunt, (ist lateinisch und bei den Engländern nur in Schauspielen üblich.)
Exit. Er geht ab. Sie gehn ab.

F.

to fare to the full. S. 180. Sich satt essen.
Fleet parson, ein Prediger, der Schulden wegen in einem Londner Gefängnisse, the Fleet, sass. Dergleichen liessen sich sonst zu heimlichen Kopulationen gebrauchen, bis das Parlament es verbot und für ungültig erklärte.
Focus of observation. S. 171. Gesichtspunkt der Bemerkung; Ort, wo man gesehen wird.
Fustic, Gelbholz.

G.

Gamekeeper, ein Jäger, der das Wild bewachet.
Gaulls, oder Galls, Galläpfel.
the Genii, ein ehmals stark besuchtes pantomimisches Schauspiel, das Garrick auf dem Covengarden Theater gab.
Gentilhombre de Camera, (ist spanisch.) Ein Kammerherr.
Gentoos, Eingebohrne, heidnische Indianer in Hindostan.
Genseng, Ginseng, (lies Dsjinseng.) eine Pflanze, welche in Sina und der dazu gehörigen Tartarei, (wie auch in Nordamerika) wächst, und dort in hohem Werthe ist. Man macht Thee von den Blättern, und braucht in Sina die Wurzel, der man lügenhafte Kräfte zuschreibt, als Medizin, zur Stärkung &c.
to go together by the ears, sich bei die Ohren kriegen.
Good bye t'ye, (d. i. good be with you) gehabt euch wohl.
Groyne, so nennen die englischen und holländischen Schiffer den Hafen Coruña in Galicien.
Guaiacum. S. 251. Franzosenholz, Pockenholz, Lignum vitæ; wächst in Mexico und einigen Antillen. Wird in der Medizin, nebst dem Gummi davon, gebraucht; das Holz auch von Tischlern verarbeitet.
Guinea-grains, Guineischer Pfeffer, Paradieskörner. (Malagueta) Sind die Körner der Groskardamomen.

H.

Hatchet; to take up the Hatchet, (eine Redensart der nordamerikanischen Wilden) die Streitaxt aufnehmen; den Krieg erklären, zu Felde ziehen.
Heels; to set up a good pair of heels, lange Beine machen.
Higledy pigledy, verwirrt durch einander. So wie wir in einem andern Sinne sagen: holter de polter.

Highdays

Highdays of health, Goldne Tage der Gesundheit.

Hoyle, hat ein Buch vom Whistspiele geschrieben.

Hurricanes. S. 181. Eine Art Assembleen.

Hygrometer, ein Instrument, die Feuchtigkeit der Luft zu messen.

I.

Incle, 1) Grobes ungebleichtes leinen Garn, 2) Zwirnband davon.

K.

Kaides. S. 138. Türken, die über einige algierische Dorfschaften als Schatzeinnehmer gesezt sind.

Keys. S. 125. Die Kaien in London; Strasse an der Themse, wo Schiffe ausgeladen werden.

Kesh. S. 316. verderbt englisch, für catched, caught, gefangen, ertappt.

L.

Landholder. S. 126. Der ein eignes Landgut besizt.

Lentiscus. S. 207. Mastixbaum.

Lizard, Vorgebirge in Cornwall, die südlichste Spitze von England.

M.

Madder, Krapp, Färberröthe.

to Make; to make away with ones self, sich selbst umbringen.

Make Land, Land sehen. (ein Schifferwort.)

Manchineal. S. 251. Spanisch Mancenilla. Der Manschinellbaum in Amerika, der noch keinen deutschen Namen hat, wächst an der See. Die Frucht, welche einem Apfel gleicht, ist schädlich, aber kein tödtliches Gift.

Manent. S 310. (ist lateinisch) Es bleiben. (auf dem Theater üblich.)

Mangroves. S. 251. Mangelbäume; wachsen in nassen Gegenden in Amerika.

Manicoles and Troolies. S. 193. Manicole- und Trulibäume. In Surinam wachsende Bäume, die Bancroft so nennt; beim Fermin heissen sie Beyl und Boltri.

Marble-head or Cape-Ann men. S. 131. Schiffer, die von diesen zweien, in Neu-England nordlich über Boston liegenden, Vorgebirgen auf den Stockfischfang ausgehen.

Mayordomo de Semana. S. 54. (spanisch) Hofmarschall, der die Woche hat.

Mayordomo Mayor, Oberhofmarschall.

Meetinghouse, gottesdienstliches Versamlungshaus, Kapelle.

Melasses, oder Molasses, der braune Sirup oder Saft, welcher von dem rohen oder Puderzucker beim Gerinnen übrig bleibt.

Meleager, ein griechischer Prinz, der in der Mythologie als ein grosser Jäger berühmt ist.

Mess-mate, Tischgesellschafter.

Milliner, eine Modehändlerin, Putzmacherin.

Millwright, Mühlenbau.

Mince-pies, Art Pasteten, mit gehacktem Fleisch, Korinten &c. welche man in England gewöhnlich um Weihnachten isst.

Misconstruction, Verdrehung, böse Auslegung.

Mortification, 1) Tödtung, Kreuzigung, 2) Kalter Brand. S. 212.

Muid- oder Mud-fish. S. 132. Hat keinen deutschen Namen, falls man ihn nicht, wie einige thun, Moderfisch nennen will.

Musketos, (spanisch Mosquitos) Art sehr schädlicher Mücken, die in den morastigen und waldigten Gegenden von Amerika sehr häufig sind.

Myrtle-tree, 1) Mirtenbaum, 2) der Wachsbaum.

N.

Nabobs, Königliche Guvernöre der Provinzen in Hindostan, die sich aber oftmals von dem Gross-Mogul unabhängig gemacht haben.

Nolens volens. S. 178. (lateinisch) Er mag wollen oder nicht.

Nantucket. S. 132. Eine kleine unter Massachusetsbai gelegene Insel. Ihre fleissigen Einwohner treiben starken Walfischfang.

O.

Ocro. S. 194. Frucht in Gestalt einer Erbse, aber von einer andern Art Pflanze, nemlich dem essbaren Eibisch (Hibiscus esculentus, beim Linné.)

Optics, 1) die mathematischen Lehren vom Lichte, 2) Sehröhre und andere Instrumente zum sehen. 3) S. 281. Gesichtswerkzeuge, d. i. Augen.

Orders, S. 169. Säulenordnung.

P.

Paderero, Bassen, Drehbassen. Kleine Schiffkanonen, die auf einem Pfahle bevestigt sind, und die man herumdrehen kann. Sie stehen insgemein auf dem Hinterverdecke.

Perpetuanos, Perpetuane oder Sempiterne, eine Art dauerhafter Sarsche.

Pier, eine Mole, Steindamm, der in die See geht, und einen künstlichen Hafen macht.

Plantin. S. 194. auch Musa, Pisang, Bananas. Eine indianische Pflanze, welche wie ein Palmbaum aufwächst, und eine sehr schmackhafte Frucht trägt.

Play. S. 37. he put me out of my play: Er machte mich ververwirrt, brachte mich aus meiner Faſſung.

Polygars, kleine Fürſten in Hindoſtan, die den Naboben Tribut geben.

Pope Joan S. 183. Ein elendes engliſches Kartenſpiel, wie beſten Bauren.

to powder upon. (Eine veraltete Redensart) Herabſchieſſen, herabfliegen.

Prime coſt, Einkaufspreis.

Propriety, 1) Eigenthum, Eigenſchaft; 2) S. 172. Schicklichkeit, Anſtand.

Pulpit - thumper, Kanzelpaucker.

Q.

Qualifier. S. 85. Grosthuer.

Quit - rent, oder White - rent, Grundzins.

R.

Rajahs, einheimiſche indianiſche Fürſten, die den Moguln, welche Hindoſtan erobert haben, zinsbar ſind.

Redwood. S. 251. Jamaikaniſches rothes Färbeholz. Breſillet

Regal. S. 293. Der Krone gehörig.

Routs. S. 181. Groſſe hochadliche Aſſemblee.

S.

Salve feſta Dies, (lateiniſch) Sei willkommen feſtlicher Tag!

to Scalp, Das Fell vom Kopfe ſchinden, wie einige nordamerikaniſche Wilden ihren Feinden thun.

Scent oder Sent, 1) Geruch, 2) Spur. to put a wrong Scent. S. 124. Einen irre führen.

Seaſon, a ful ſeaſon. S 51 Eine Brunnenzeit voller Gäſte, volkreiche Brunnenzeit.

Sedan, Sänfte.

Service, Gottesdienſt. Solemn ſervice, S. 65. feierliche Seelmeſſe.

Sommelier de Corps, (franz.) Hofkellermeiſter.

Soubah, ſ. Subah.

Sportsmanſhip, Waidmanſchaft, Jägerei.

to ſtake. He ſtakes his Honour. S. 83. Er ſetzt ſeine Ehre zu Pfande.

Stamina, S. 250. Staubfäden der Blumen.

Sting, ſtechen. Stung to the quick, S. 282. Sehr aufgebracht.

Stocking - frame Trade. Handel mit gewebten wollenen Strümpfen.

Stock Jobbing, Grundloſer Handel mit Stocks, oder Aktienreuterei.

Subah oder Soubah, S. 240. (Eigentlich Subadr) Iſt in Hindoſtan der Name eines Vizekönigs des Groſsmoguls über eine Subah oder Provinz, z. E. Decan, Bengal &c. Unter ihm ſtehen die Nabobe u. ſ. w.

Swing, ſchwingen. S. 94. We may ſwing for this: wir mögten dafür hängen müſſen.

T.

T.

Tape. Weisser Zwirnband.

Tide-Harbour, Fluthhafen, d. i. ein Hafen, der nur bei der Fluth genug Wasser hat.

Topics of Scandal, Stadtklätschereien.

To wit, nehmlich. s. Viz.

Troolie. S. 193. Trulibaum, S. Manicoles.

U.

Vauxhall und Ranelagh, zwei öffentliche Lustgärten bei London.

Victualling Office. Ein Kollegium, welches die Flotte mit Lebensmitteln versieht. Proviantamt.

Vivite, ait, fugio, (lateinisch) Genielst des Lebens, sagt er, ich fliehe.

Viz (aus dem lateinischen videlicet verkürzt) wird gelesen to wit, und heisst: nämlich folgendes.

Unpalatable, unschmackhaft, ungenielsbar.

Unprecedented Action, unerhörte Handlung.

Upstart of Fortune, Glückspilz.

Ventre à terre, S. 55. Französisch, so viel als im stärksten Galop.

W.

War-Whoop, Kriegsgeschrei der Wilden in Nordamerika,

Whole. You are a whole Man again. S. 322. Sie sind wieder ein behaltener Mann.

Wind'em and cross'em. Ein Jägerwort, die Hunde aufzumuntern.

Wind; to take Wind, laut, ruchtbar werden.

Woodward. Ein berühmter Schauspieler in London, Woodwards night, der Abend, da für ihn Komödie gespielt wird.

to write. S. 21. I writ statt I wrote; ist nicht mehr gebräuchlich.

Y.

Yams, S. 194. oder Ignames, Tetes, eine guineische und amerikanische Pflanze, deren Wurzel, sonderlich von den Negern, geröstet und gekocht gegessen wird.

Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0348
DFG

LBMV Schwerin
003 726 053
33

Landesbibliothek
Mecklenburg-Vorpommern
Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de
/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0349
DFG

Landesbibliothek
Mecklenburg-Vorpommern
Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de
/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0350
DFG

verwirrt, brachte mich aus meiner Fassung.

Polygars, kleine Fürsten in Hindostan, die den Nabo-ben Tribut geben.

Pope Joan S. 183. Ein elendes englisches Kartenspiel, wie beste n Bauren.

to powder upon. (Eine veraltete Redensart) Herabschiessen, herabfliegen.

Prime cost, Einkaufspreis.

Propriety, 1) Eigenthum, Eigenschaft; 2) S. 172. Schicklichkeit, Anstand.

Pulpit - thumper, Kanzelpaucker.

Q.

Qualifier. S. 85. Grosthuer.

Quit-rent, oder White-rent, Grundzins.

R.

Rajahs, einheimische indianische Fürsten, die den Moguln, welche Hindostan erobert haben, zinsbar sind.

Redwood. S. 251. Jamaikanisches rothes Färbeholz. Bresillet

Regal. S. 293. Der Krone gehörig.

Routs. S. 181. Grosse hochadliche Assemblee.

S.

Salve festa Dies, (lateinisch) Sei willkommen festlicher Tag!

to Scalp, Das Fell vom Kopfe schinden, wie einige nordamerikanische Wilden ihren Feinden thun.

Scent oder Sent, 1) Ge
2) Spur. to put a v
Scent. S. 124. Einer führen.

Season, a full season. S 51
Brunnenzeit voller volkreiche Brunnenz

Sedan, Sänfte.

Service, Gottesdienst. S service, S. 65. feie Seelmesse.

Sommelier de Corps, (
Hofkellermeister.

Soubah, s. Subah.

Sportsmanship, Wai
schaft, Jägerei.

to stake. He stakes his H
S. 83. Er setzt sein zu Pfande.

Stamina, S. 250. Stau
der Blumen.

Sting, stechen. Stung
quick, S. 282. Sehr bracht.

Stocking-frame Trade del mit gewebten W Strümpfen.

Stock Jobbing, Grur Handel mit Stocks
Aktienreuterei.

Subah oder Soubah, (Eigentlich Subad
in Hindostan der N nes Vizekönigs des moguls über eine oder Provinz, z. E.
Bengal &c. Unter
hen die Nabobe u.

Swing, schwingen.
We may swing f
wir mögten dafür müssen.

the scale towards document
Image Engineering Scan Reference Chart TE263 Serial No. 520
Patch Reference numbers on UTT
C1 B1 A1 C2 B2 A2 B5 A5 20 18 17 16 11
10 09 03 02 01 C7 B7 A7 C8 B8 A8 C9 B9
4.5 5.0 5.6 6.3
mm Inch
Landesbibliothek Mecklenburg-Vorpommern Günther Uecker
http://purl.uni-rostock.de/rosdok/ppn1688496319/phys_0351
DFG